Servant Reenacts Death of Heiress For Inquest Jury

Doctor Finds Bruises on Body Were Less Than 48 Hours Old.

Report on Autopsy To Be Made Today

Wife Gave Him $1,000 a Month, Davidson Tells Solicitor.

By Edward T. Folliard.

A Staff Correspondent.

Pinehurst, N. C., March 6.—Bruises found on the body of Mrs. Elva Statler Davidson, 22-year-old heiress and bride of two months, were received within 48 hours before her death, Dr. M. W. Marr told a coroner's jury here today.

His statement startled the crowd of spectators and aroused keen interest among the six men who are asked to determine how Mrs. Davidson came to her death.

Her body was found a week ago today, half in an automobile in the garage in back of her honeymoon cottage here.

Dr. Marr said that the cause of death was carbon monoxide poisoning, which is generated by the exhaust of an automobile.

Davidson Again Testifies.

H. Bradley Davidson, jr., of Washington, husband of the young woman, was asked about the bruises yesterday. He recalled that his wife told him and two of their guests that she had been struck by a tennis ball on the Saturday preceding her death. He recalled also that in mid-February, while in Boston, she had slipped and fallen on the ice.

But these were not the bruises that were found on Mrs. Davidson's body after her death, Dr. Marr told the coroner's jury today.

He explained that the age of bruises can be determined by the coloration up to a certain point. Those found on her right thigh and hip, he said, must have been received "from a half hour to 48 hours" before her death.

The tennis game mentioned by her husband and the ice episode in Boston would not fall within that time.

Questioned By Pruette.

Solicitor Roland Pruette, who indicated at the outset his belief that Mrs. Davidson was murdered, set to work at the outset this afternoon to explode the suicide and accident theories.

After establishing that Dr. Marr had known the heiress for "several years," he asked:

"Was she of a cheerful disposition?"

"Yes," the physician answered, "unusually so."

He then asked about her physical condition.

"She was exceptionally athletic," Dr. Marr said.

Solicitor Pruette brought out Mrs.

Lawyer Suicide In Chevy Chase

William M. Smith, 49, an attorney, shot and killed himself yesterday at his home in the first block of Woodbine street, Chevy Chase, Md. He used a .32-caliber automatic revolver.

The housemaid, Alice Gray, found Mr. Smith's body. The charge from the pistol had entered his head, and the weapon lay beside his body in the bedroom where he ended his life, police said.

In the house at the time, in addition to the maid, was Mr. Smith's 3-year-old daughter, Barbara May Smith. Authorities learned that Mr. Smith's wife, Mrs. Lucille S. Smith, was at the Columbia Country Club at the time he shot himself.

A note to his wife was found near Smith's body. He described leaving $15,000 insurance, about $2,500 in cash and a number of certified checks. Police said he gave no motive for his act.

Mr. Smith was a member of the Columbia Country Club. He had been a resident of Chevy Chase for some years.

Battle Sweeps Greek Seaport After Air Raid

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Athens, March 6.—Bloody hand-to-hand fighting in the streets of ancient Kavalla tonight followed an attack by 20 government bombing planes which sowed death and destruction in the ranks of Macedonian rebels.

After raking Kavalla with machine guns and raining bombs upon it, the bombers roared away to strafe the insurgents' encampment near Seres, from which government artillery blasted them earlier today.

A five-hour battle, the outcome of which was not disclosed in semiofficial messages reaching the capital from the front, followed the aerial raid on the old Aegean seaport as residents, described as supporters of the government, rose against the revolutionists who had invaded it.

So hard pressed by the government's land and air forces was Gen. Demetrios Cammenos, the rebel commander, that he wirelessed an appeal to the rebel ship Psara to put in at Kavalla and help quell the enraged citizens, the message said.

Fleet Invites Battle.

A Greek fleet cleared the Straits of Euboea en route to Crete to try to engage the insurrectionists' five ships. One of them, the cruiser Averoff, has been reported missing from its harbor at Crete

As the aerial marksmen, diving as low as 60 feet, rained bombs upon the rebels' barracks and swept their camps with machine-gun fire, three Greek divisions, pressing in at the enemy from as many sides, chafed at bad weather which impeded their advance.

Premier P. Tsaldaris reiterated in forceful language the government's determination "to purge the coun-

British Plan To Construct 28 Warships

Naval Estimates Set at $292,000,000, Reply to Reich Outcry.

By the United Press.

London, March 6.—Great Britain made a double-barreled reply today to Germany's passionate outcry against her recent white paper criticizing the Reich's militarism.

The government announced naval estimates of $292,000,000 and the projected building of 28 new warships.

It refused to withdraw the critical statements made in the sensational document which resulted in the postponement of what was to have been a pacification conference between Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler and Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary.

The tension that already grips Europe was increased not only by the announced British plan for rearmament, but also by indications that other countries will join the armament move.

France announced a project for building a line battleship and two destroyers of moderate size, at a cost of $68,000,000, with another second line battleship planned for 1937.

Spain announced $61,978,000 for a national defense project, which will include the building of 12 submarines, 12 800-ton torpedo boats and a host of motor launches, torpedo launches, mine sweepers and other auxiliary craft.

Berlin still seethed with anger over the British declaration that the Reich was rearming rapidly and that this evidence of militarism necessitated a heavy armament program for other nations.

Simon and George Lansbury, the Labor Party leader, dueled in Commons over the suggestion that the cabinet should "withdraw" the white paper until after Simon is able to hold conversations with Hitler.

"I certainly shall not," Sir John declared.

"But do you think it conducive to friendly negotiations to issue so unfriendly a document?" Lansbury persisted.

"I dare say that point will enter into the discussion," Simon replied.

Seymour Cocks, another Laborite, declared Sir John should go to Moscow "where they haven't lost their voices."

Loud laughter followed the suggestion, which referred to Hitler's "diplomatic cold" which was the excuse offered for canceling his engagement with the British foreign secretary.

Sir John did say to Lansbury, however, that he was in communication with the German government over a possible date for the postponed meeting and said with a straight face that the meeting had been canceled on orders of Hitler's physicians.

Conferences Held.

Importance the British government attaches to the crucial developments was indicated when Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, although suffering from a cold which prevented his attending the noonday cabinet meeting, nevertheless conferred with officials of the foreign office during the afternoon.

It was understood some important announcement might be made tomorrow.

In general, the cabinet was inclined to adopt a more pacificatory tone towards Germany and some surprise was expressed at the swelling anger of Berlin and the sudden abandonment of the diplomatic conference.

The British naval estimates, issued only 24 hours after the memorable white paper, called for the following building program:

Three cruisers, one flotilla leader and eight destroyers, three submarines, including one mine-layer; one submarine depot ship, four sloops, three of them mine-laying; one surveying ship and seven smaller vessels, including two coastal sloops.

First U. S. Armored Cruiser Of the Air Makes Secret Test

By the Associated Press

Santa Monica, Calif., March 6.—America's newest, fiercest eagle of the sea defense tested its wings tody, but the most interesting things about it, being naval secrets, could not be told.

The big, armored, high-winged monoplane soared out over the Pacific on its maiden test flight without clicking of cameras. Two red-lettered signs near the launching, the first of such signs displayed here, warned "do not photograph," explaining that unauthorized photographing of naval or military secrets is punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Critical eyes of naval and civilian aviation experts watched the twin-motored XO 30-1 climb gracefully and cavort as it was put under severe tests of flying, landing and take-offs.

These experts visualized it as the first of a fleet of such craft that will bring American possessions in the Pacific defensively within hours of each other instead of days apart.

Last year the navy's patrol flying boats demonstrated the Panama Canal Zone is but 25 hours and 30 minutes from Norfolk, Va., and 32 hours and 41 minutes from San Diego; that the Hawaiian Islands are but 26 hours and 15 minutes from the Pacific Coast naval bases, and the Alaskan area is proportionately nearer.

The launching marked the birth of an armored cruiser of the air, equipped for bombing and machine gun strafing, that brings last year's pioneering patrol flights into the realm of precursors of shortened lines of coast and insular defense.

Construction of the sky cruiser was secret. There were months of model tests.

It will have a large crew of gunners, bombers and navigators. The cruising range and speed and all elements of its design and factors of efficiency are carefully guarded naval secrets.

Dust Storm Descends Like Dusk Upon City

Tons of Kansas, Colorado, Texas and Oklahoma top soil fell on Washington yesterday and last night.

The "landslide" was not political but meteorological.

Washingtonians thought the haze, accompanied by rain, was a mist or fog. It was a dust storm, according to H. H. Bennett, director of the soil erosion service of the Department of Interior. Airplane observers at Bolling Field said the dust haze extended to an 8,000-foot altitude.

Hundreds of Washingtonians, however, had a different idea. They had been tempted by balmy weather and a high temperature of 76 degrees to step out in spring clothes. Showers, however, proved muddy when the sifting silt was brought down by rain.

The President, too, saw signs of spring.

Tax 'Pink Slip' Faces Repeal By Congress

Senators Join House in Opposing Publicity on Incomes.

By Robert C. Albright.

So-called "pink slip" publicity provisions of the present income tax law appeared doomed last night, as shifting Senate sentiment and solid House opposition paved a path for repeal.

An informal check in the Senate showed 47 Senators aligned against new publicity methods, listing gross and net incomes together with items deductible and total tax paid, on a pink slip, available to all comers.

Only 18 Senators definitely favored continuing the present law, and the rest were noncommittal. The preponderant number in favor of repeal, although not a majority, showed a marked change from the former Senate viewpoint, and left little doubt how the vote would go in that chamber.

The House concededly is in favor of repealing the "pink slip" law, and is awaiting an opportunity to vote on a bill abolishing the requirements. To this end a repeal bill was reported yesterday by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton may go before the House Rules Committee for a special rule giving the measure legislative right of way in the House in the next few days.

For Less Obnoxious Form.

The House bill bears Doughton's own signature and has the backing of House leaders, who intend to move for early consideration before the March 15 deadline, for income tax filing makes the essential facts of every tax statement available to an inquisitive public.

The issue is nonpartisan, and no Republican opposition, as such, is expected in either chamber. It was a Republican, Representative Robert L. Bacon, of New York, who introduced the original House bill on the subject.

Among the 47 Senators unofficially recorded yesterday as favoring "pink slip" repeal are many who favor continuing income tax publicity in what they regard as a less "obnoxious" but just as effective form. Unless an adequate substitute provision can not be worked out, however, several made clear they will not vote for repeal.

Works Fight Slated Today In the Senate

Army Supply Bill Due First, McCarran Sees 'Stiffer' Support.

Administration Refuses to Concede Wavering on Wage Plan.

By the Associated Press.

A "stiffening" of support for his prevailing wage amendment to the $4,880,000,000 relief bill and a "wavering" in Administration opposition ranks were claimed yesterday by Senator McCarran (Democrat), Nevada.

The Nevadan made his forecast after a survey of reaction to announcement Tuesday that Vermont's two Republican Senators—Austin and Gibson—would change from his to the Administration's side if certain committee changes were retained in the measure.

Administration forces refused to concede any "wavering" and a "battle of amendments" appeared in prospect. Other amendments are sure to be offered when debate is resumed.

Action Expected Today.

The Senate did not reach consideration of the revised relief bill yesterday, but hoped to get to it today after disposition of the Army appropriation measure.

McCarran prepared the stage, however, by reoffering his wage amendment in the form in which it passed the Senate, 44 to 43, two weeks ago. The bill, sent back to committee on motion of Democratic leaders, was reported back again Tuesday with some Administration concessions, but minus the McCarran amendment.

The two Vermont Senators—who joined 19 other Republicans, 21 Democrats, one Progressive and one Farmer-Laborite, in voting for the wage amendment—have announced they would vote against it again if the Administration concessions were ultimately approved.

These concessions include a breaking down of the $4,000,000,000 works fund into eight classes of projects, with $350,000,000 to go for flood control, and elimination of much of the House preamble under which bill opponents claim the President could do anything he pleased with the money.

New Deal Confident.

Democratic leaders feel the bill will now go through as the Chief Executive wants it, even though the Senate might again approve the McCarran amendment. If that happens, they will count on it being eliminated in conference with the House.

The only surface developments yesterday were the adoption by the Senate of a resolution by Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, an opponent of the bill, calling on the Treasury for an itemized account of expenditures under the original $3,300,000,000 public works appropriation in the recovery act, and an announcement by Harry L. Hopkins that the relief population had reached a new record high of 22,375,000.

Byrd said he wanted the information to fortify his argument that $4,000,000,000 in new funds were not needed for construction work. He understands more than half of the original appropriation remains unspent and much of the money already allocated has been transferred to other Government agencies.

Committee Cold to Healy Plea For Laxity in Holding Firm Ban

Long-Drawn Fight Over Regulatory Bill Anticipated as Members Frown on Proposal for Wider Discretionary Powers.

By the Associated Press

A suggestion by Robert E. Healy that the Federal Government relax its proposed ban against utility holding companies yesterday foreshadowed the likelihood of a long-drawn-out fight over the pending regulatory bill.

Healy, now a member of the securities commission, as counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, conducted its utilities inquiry. He proposed changes in the measure pending before the House Commerce Committee which would give the regulatory authorities a wider discretion in deciding which utility holding companies should be given a longer lease on life.

Many members of the committee, however, were known to feel that the present provisions of the bill, giving the Federal power and securities commissions authority to allow a holding company to continue operations if they found its work in the public interest, are broad enough.

There were indications they intended to oppose any change, although none would discuss the Healy proposal. Unless a holding company is deemed useful, the pending bill would put it out of business in five years.

Healy suggested that the administrative agency be given broader authority to consider the interests of the investor in holding companies before forcing their dissolution. He added, however, generally speaking, the holding companies should be eliminated.

Chairman Rayburn (Democrat), Texas, advocate of abolition of the holding companies and co-author of the measure, suggested to Healy that

'Almost Well Now,' Alyce Declares

By the Associated Press.

Fall River, Mass., March 6.—Little Alyce Jane McHenry, who underwent Monday a complicated operation which shifted her stomach from her chest to the abdominal cavity, appeared on the road to recovery tonight.

"I am getting well; I am almost well now," exclaimed 10-year-old Alyce Jane today after drinking a glass of orange juice and finding it did not distress her stomach.

Surgeons were not ready to say Alyce Jane was definitely recovering, but they and the nurses wore broad smiles as continued improvement was reported. The medical men warned against premature optimism.

Roosevelt Heads Mourners Who Will Pay Respects to Great Liberal.

From the seats of the mighty and the homes of the humble tribute poured forth in unending stream yesterday to the memory of the man of whom it was said that he stood, like a rock in the bed of a river, with the waters of events flowing over it.

In a plain brick house on I street, the body of former Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes lay waiting funeral services which will see him laid to a soldier's rest in solemn ceremonies which will be attended by the President.

But he did not lie in state. Instead, in the vast, high-ceilinged bedroom, which had seen him slip so quietly away from the life to which he had long and firmly held, he lay in his bed, waiting the echo of taps that will sound off tomorrow a career which began when the bugles of the War of the Rebellion called him to arms in 1861. He would have been 94 years old tomorrow.

That same simple pattern which marked Justice Holmes' long life will mark these ceremonies. Still not lying in state, the body will remain at the I street house until Friday. Then shortly before noon, a hearse will draw it in solitude to All Souls Church.

Former secretaries—young men chosen from Harvard honor students annually to serve under Mr. Holmes—will usher official Washington to seats. Mrs. Roosevelt will lead the mourners at the public services.

Briefly the Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce will read the funeral service. An organ will play. There will be no eulogy.

Then the procession will wind its way slowly to Arlington, the casket draped in the Union flag which

Robinson Again Is Made Target

Committee Still Unable to Reach Decision on Inquiry.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Throwing the Senate again into an uproar for almost an hour, Senator Huey P. Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, yesterday took another slap at Democratic Leader Joe Robinson and in a list of formal charges against Postmaster General James A. Farley accused him of thwarting a grand jury investigation of an alleged financial scandal in Tennessee.

This charge, the most recent of many the "Kingfish" has made against the Postmaster General, caused a buzzing of gossip in Capitol corridors. Senator Long named Norman H. Davis, President Roosevelt's ambassador at large, as involved in it.

Senator Long, before a crowded Senate, hurled this latest accusation at Mr. Farley a few minutes before Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, and chairman of the Postoffices and Post Roads Committee, convened that group to continue its consideration of the Long resolution calling for an inquiry into the Postmaster General's activities.

Fails to Reach Decision.

The committee, after deliberating more than an hour without reaching a decision, recessed to meet again today. The opinion was general on Capitol Hill that the "Kingfish" had added to Senator McKellar's troubles by associating Mr. Farley with a matter in which the constituents of the committee chairman have an active interest.

This bit of strategy has been described by Huey as 'putting the ants" on an antagonist and "letting him scratch."

No sooner had Senator Long shot this bolt than he went after Senator Robinson, first by comparing conditions in Louisiana as superior to those in Arkansas, and then by having the clerk read into the Congressional Record again a list of the clients, including many public utilities, of the Robinson law firm in Little Rock, Ark.

This brought from Senator Robinson a categorical denial that he had ever served or received compensation from any of the public utilities listed.

He asserted he saw no reason why a Senator should not practice law if it did not interfere with his public duties. He had handled only one or two cases in the last 10 years, so heavy had his Senate duties been, he added, explaining he held a limited partnership in his law firm and received compensation only for cases in which he participated.

Contending that on Tuesday the "Kingfish" had "not only assumed

Roosevelt Ends Markets' Rise On 'Inflation'

'Street' Misinterpreted His Remark on Price Level, Stocks Soared.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Stock and commodity markets closed lower yesterday after a short-lived inflationary flurry caused by a remark by President Roosevelt, misinterpreted in Wall street, that prices have not yet risen high enough to offset the Nation's debt load.

Although the President made it clear that this does not mean he is moving toward further devaluation of the dollar in terms of gold, and, in effect, ridiculed the idea, directly contrary reports were circulated on the trading floors.

Alarmed and irritated by this misunderstanding, the White House issued a blanket denial which had the effect of puncturing the market balloon. Prices immediately began to drop and closed, in most cases, lower than before the rally began.

Price Level at 79.6.

The highest importance has been attached to the President's opinion of the commodity price index, since a readjustment of the relationship between prices and debts is one of the cardinal principles of the New Deal.

Vinson Victor In Committee; Patman Scoffs

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Angry words from supporters of the Patman bonus bill yesterday greeted action of a House committee in voting, 14 to 11, in favor of the opposition Vinson measure.

Backstage wire-pulling continued at fever tilt as friends of the competitive proposals jockeyed for an advantage. Indications were a vote would not be reached on the floor before next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Chairman O'Connor of the House Rules Committee put the quietus on reports that a parliamentary maneuver would block a floor vote on the Patman plan when he said:

"It is perfectly agreeable to me to have a vote on the Patman bill. Of course, I'm speaking only as an individual; not for the committee."

Patman Waits "Fair Test."

Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), of Texas, champion of the proposal to pay the service certificates in full by printing $2,000,000,000 in new currency, reiterated he had been assured the House would be given ample opportunity to choose between the two plans despite committee action.

"The committee vote doesn't mean a thing," the Texan stormed. "Why, 10 out of 18 Democrats voted for

Ambulance Set Afire in Crash; Driver Dying, Ill Boy Unhurt

One man was critically injured late yesterday when an ambulance he was driving for the Board of Public Welfare and an automobile collided at Constitution avenue and Twenty-sixth street.

The driver, Harry Walthrop, 45, of the 300 block of Second street northeast, was pinned beneath the burning wreckage of the ambulance when it caught fire as it overturned. He was rushed to Emergency Hospital in a Naval Hospital ambulance.

Physicians, who hold slight hope for his recovery, said he suffered a fractured skull, possible internal injuries, a number of fractured ribs and severe burns of the thigh.

In the ambulance at the time of the crash were James Rochester, 10, of the 300 block of M street northwest, who was being taken to Gallinger Hospital for treatment of pneumonia, and his father, C. F. Rochester. Both escaped injury.

Father and son were taken to Emergency Hospital, where doctors, diagnosing the child's condition as serious, had him transferred immediately to Gallinger.

The automobile was driven by Leslie C. Egleston, 34, of Ballston, Va. Eggleston, who was unhurt, and C. J. Bickford and Sam Milhauser, a park policeman, extricated Walthrop from the wreckage.

Swanson Puts McCarl Clash Up to President

White House Expected to Act on Expenditure Matter Tomorrow.

The Swanson-McCarl conflict which, up to now, has pursued a course between the Navy Building and the General Accounting Office, is expected to be laid in the lap of the White House tomorrow.

"I reckon he'll take it up himself," Secretary Swanson said, referring to the President, at his press conference yesterday. Almost simultaneously it was learned that the row over payment of travel expenses incurred by dependents of naval officers ordered home for retirement probably will come up at President Roosevelt's Cabinet meeting tomorrow.

"Criminations and recriminations between high officers of the Government," the Secretary said in a formal statement, "are neither conducive to good government or good business.

Advises Calmer Action.

"I think that all matters of importance in the administration of the Government and business should be determined without either prejudice or passion."

Comptroller General McCarl harshly criticized the head of the Navy Department in a 13-page letter made public Monday for the latter's decision to be guided henceforward by rulings of the Attorney General and the Court of Claims rather than those of the Comptroller.

"The present controversy," Swanson's statement continued, "which has been released to the press commenced about 12 years ago when Congress passed legislation in regard to travel allowances of dependents of officers and men of the Army and Navy ordered to make a permanent change of station.

"In the case of retired officers ordered home to await orders the Comptroller General has held that this does not constitute a permanent change of station within the meaning of the law; Attorney General Stone in 1924 and numerous decisions of the Court of Claims have held to the contrary.

Asked Cummings' Opinion.

"Last May it became necessary for the Secretary of the Navy to issue instructions to disbursing officers of the Navy what course should be followed in connection with such cases. Should the decision of the Comptroller General interpreting the basic law be followed or should the law as interpreted by the courts be followed?

"I referred this matter to the Attorney General for his opinion, as that officer is the chief law officer of the Government and is designated by law to prosecute and defend litigation. The Attorney General advised me that the opinion of the Attorney General and the decision of the court should be followed.

Crux of the Controversy.

"The real question at issue is what agency is paramount in the interpretation of the law. Do the courts interpret the law, or does the Comptroller General?

"The Government conducts a huge business, and it is obviously necessary that it be conducted along business lines. This can not be done if there is a constant difference of opinion as to whether the interpretation of laws by the courts shall or shall not be followed.

"I think this matter should be clarified and definitely settled whether the Comptroller General is the agency for the final interpretation of the law, or whether the courts of the United States are. My only effort is to conduct the business of this department in an orderly, efficient and businesslike way."

Kidnaping Stirs Central America

Young Son of San Salvador Merchant Is Abducted.

By the Associated Press.

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, March 6. Central America's first kidnaper was the object of an intense police search in Honduras tonight.

The Honduras authorities launched their hunt after receiving reports from the neighboring republic of El Salvador that Enrique Rodriguez Escobar, asserted Mexican citizen, kidnaped Oscar Martinez, young son of Cecilio Martinez, wealthy San Salvador merchant.

The police report said the kidnaper crossed the border into Honduras with the child.

A sensation was caused here by the case and intense public indignation was stirred. Insofar as is known, the crime is without precedent in Central America.

Dr. Peter Guilday's Investiture Today

Historian to Become Urban Prelate to Pontiff.

The Rev. Dr. Peter Guilday, of the Catholic University faculty, will be invested as urban prelate to his holiness, Pope Pius XI, with the title of right reverend monsignor, at a solemn high mass to be celebrated this morning at 10:30 a. m. at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

The investiture will be made in the Dominican rite by the Rev. Dr. George B. Stratmeier, O. P. Dr. Guilday is professor of American church history at the university. The ceremony coincides with the annual university celebration of the feast of St. Thomas Aquinas, Dominican doctor of the church.

The Most Rev. James H. Ryan, Bishop of Modra and rector of Catholic University, will preside over the mass, which will be attended by prominent historians. The honor to be bestowed on Dr. Guilday is in recognition of his attainments in scholarship, and was requested by the Archbishop of Philadelphia.

The Saga Of Soapy Smith; Headlines In The Record; A 'Lucky' Low In Mortality Rate.

By Raymond Clapper

ONE sect believes that spirits are reincarnated in succeeding generations. Possibly that is what has happened to the late Soapy Smith, a small-time dictator known in the Western mining camps a half century ago as the "Monarch of Misrule." If so, it would explain some political phenomena that is taking shape today.

Soapy was a master of hokum. He made his first big money operating on the streets of Denver with an open sampie case. He sold soap. When his crowd had been assembled, Soapy would shake from his wallet a bundle of greenbacks and drop them beside the bars of soap—hundred dollar bills, fifties, twenties and many ones and twos. Then he would begin wrapping the soap in blue paper. Frequently he would include a greenback with the soap and toss the little blue package into the growing pile.

To those who simply wished to by a cake of soap, he offered it for 25 cents.

"But," he would add, "if you have any sporting blood and wish to take a chance on winning one of those little green papers with the big numbers on them, ranging up to $100, I will sell you a bar of soap from these I have already wrapped, for the ridiculous price of $5—and you will have the privilege of drawing your own package.

"If you have been watching me as closely as I hope, it should be simple to select a bar of soap wrapped in real money—and the first man up has the best chance."

A seedy listener stepped up and handed a $5 gold piece for one of the cakes of soap. He unwrapped it and with a yell flourished a $50 bill. That started the sales. Then Soapy folded his sample case and disappeared. He went to his hotel room and found half a dozen men waiting for him. They were the purchasers who had drawn more than one or two dollars with their soap. They extended their winnings. Soapy counted the bills.

"Not so bad," he said, "all present and accounted for. I thought for a while I had slipped, but I was pretty sure these were all I had left in the pile for you to pick up."

The detailed story of how Soapy Smith rose from this start to be a mining camp dictator is told in a recent book, "The Reign of Soapy Smith."

He should have been operating today. He could go into politics, where he wouldn't even need a stock of soap.

Senate guards seized the wrong man when they went hunting for Huey Long's armed guards. They frisked one of Long's friends who had been sitting in the private Senate gallery. Senate officers knew him as an intimate of Long and jumped to the conclusion that he was a bodyguard. He is Long's undercover man. He carries a straight, heavy walking stick, but had no concealed weapons.

* * * *

The Kingfish or somebody inserted headlines over his remarks as they appeared in the Congressional Record yesterday after his clash with Senator Robinson. Long's first speech was headed, "The Wrecking Crew." His second speech answering Robinson was headed, "My Voice Will Not Be Changed While People Suffer." Headlines, other than a mere topical label, do not usually appear in the record of Senate debate.

Long's threat to go after the scalps of several Senators in next year's elections makes more significant than ever his recent unnoticed changing of the Louisiana primary law. Hereafter the primary will be held in January instead of September. Long is up next year. Thus he will dispose of his reelection worries before the 1936 campaign opens in other States.

Officials of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. report that the mortality rate during the depression has been very low, not high, as might have been expected. They don't know why this should be. The number of suicides is going down. In January the drop was 28 per cent below that of a year ago. There have been fewer accidental deaths and a 6.9 per cent drop in automobile fatalities in spite of repeal. Apparently just luck in both cases.

There are those who complain, sometimes justly, that newspapers are cheap, trivial and superficial. They will find inspiring tonic in Franklyn Waltman's classic story on the late Justice Holmes, which appeared in yesterday morning's Washington Post.

This story—in the democracy of a newspaper office every piece for the paper is a story—was pounded out in the midst of the midnight activity of The Post's city room by a reporter with his sleeves rolled up and an ash tray of accumulating cigarette ends at his elbow. Literature is not necessarily something that comes out of an ivory tower and goes into a book.

Senator James Byrnes, White House spokesman in the Senate, was billed a few days ago to make a radio speech defending the Administration. He was unable to deliver the address and a Republican old guarder, Senator Metcalfe, of Rhode Island, was substituted. He made a roug,h anti-Administration speech.

Now Byrnes is getting fan mail from listeners who didn't know a substitute was speaking. They accuse him of posing as a friend of the Administration and then making speeches against it.

Among the signs of spring reported by President Roosevelt yesterday was a crocus back of the White House.

"Did you say croakers?" a reporter asked.

Drug Indictments Name Former Customs Agent

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, March 6.—Wesley L. Sischo, former customs agent, and 13 other persons, including 7 Chinese, were indicted by the Federal grand jury today in four true bills charging conspiracy to bribe a Federal officer. The indictments resulted from a raid in which customs men reported seizure of $35,000 worth of narcotics.

Melvin L. Hanks, acting customs supervisor, said he posed as a dishonest official and received money from the smugglers.

Richberg Gives Senate Views Of NRA Today

Suggestions to Curtail or Abolish Agency Heard by Committee.

Plans to curtail drastically the functions of NRA, and even to abolish it altogether, were put forward on Capitol Hill yesterday as the Senate Finance Committee prepared to hear from Donald R. Richberg today the recommendations of the Administration.

With the New Deal coordinator as its first witness, the finance committee will meet at 10 a. m. to begin its investigation of the NRA. Out of this series of hearings is expected to come legislation determining the future of the Blue Eagle.

An intimation of feeling within the committee came, meantime, from Senator Walter F. George (Democrat), of Georgia, who declared after a call on President Roosevelt that NRA codes would probably be divided into compulsory pacts, on the one hand, and voluntary agreements, on the other.

Division of the Codes.

The compulsory codes, he said, would be only for key industries doing an interstate business, such as coal and oil. The voluntary codes would be for industries of intrastate business and would be largely confined, it was indicated, to labor provisions.

There is still some question, the Senator said, whether the NRA should be maintained as a separate agency or whether its functions should be taken over by the Federal Trade Commission. In any event, he added, the antitrust laws will be restored, except in cases of natural resources like coal.

In his message urging extension of the NRA for another two years, the President proposed a tightening of antitrust provisions, but he did not indicate how far he would go. Sentiment expressed by finance committee members has been overwhelming in favor of such curbs.

King for Abolition.

Another member of the group, Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, yesterday proposed outright abolition of the NRA as an agency and the transfer of its functions to the Department of Labor and the Federal Trade Commission. He said he saw no need to continue the recovery administration.

Richberg will be the first of a number of witnesses to be called by the committee, it was announced by Chairman Pat Harrison, of Mississippi. Among this number may be Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, originator of the Blue Eagle.

Johnson's successor, S. Clay Williams, will retire in two or three weeks as chairman of the recovery board, but whether a new chairman will be named was uncertain at NRA headquarters. As executive secretary, Dr. Leon Marshall has presided at many meetings and in one quarter it was thought this arrangement might be continued after Williams leaves.

Meanwhile, I. M. Ornburn, head of the Cigar Makers' International Union, assailed the administration of Mr. Williams, a tobacco manufacturer. He declared that, "by resigning at this time, Mr. Williams refuses to face the music as an official who can be called to account."

The recovery administration, in an apparent effort to answer some critics, issued a memorandum "clarifying" the functions of the Industrial Appeals Board. This board was set up August 1, the NRA pointed out, to hear individuals with a grievance. It has heard 44 cases.

Roper Bans Airplanes Over Downtown Area

The area over which planes are prohibited from flying at any altitude is bounded by the Union Station and the Capitol, the Naval Hospital and the White House.

The new rule goes into effect immediately. It followed complaints from the White House that planes flying overhead had disturbed President Roosevelt. Officials did not state whether the new rule applied to small blimps and dirigibles.

Redistribution Of Income Plea Of Gov. Eccles

Income Tax Is Called Most Effective Plan to Achieve Balance.

By the Associated Press.

Redistribution of income—not wealth—was suggested to the House Banking Committee yesterday by Marriner S. Eccles, Federal Reserve Board governor, as one way of solving the depression's problems.

Testifying on the new omnibus banking bill, Eccles almost, but not quite, took a leaf out of Huey Long's redistribution of wealth book. But Eccles said in effect it would be all right for a man with, say, $10,000,000 in capital keep that, provided his income was redistributed. Long wants the capital redistributed.

The Reserve Board governor went back to post-war days to illustrate his argument. At the height of the boom, he said, one-tenth of 1 per cent of the families at the top of the income list received as much as 42 per cent of the families at the bottom of the list.

Got as Much as 400.

Furthermore, he pointed out, a single average family in the big income class got as much as 400 families at the bottom of the list.

"This one-tenth of 1 per cent was unable to use all this income in consumption," he said. "They therefore had to find an outlet in the investment field. As a result, the capacity to produce increased out of all relation to the capacity to consume."

In other words, he said, families with big war and postwar incomes could not spend all the money they had to buy things. The only thing left to do was to invest it. By investing it in stocks, bonds or industrial enterprises, they stimulated production. Soon more things were being made than could be sold, and the reaction set in."

"Not a Question of Money."

"Our ability to fight the depression in this economy of abundance is not a question of money," Eccles said. "It is a question of distribution.

"The depression was not brought about by a shortage of money. As long as we had an inequitable distribution of wealth as existed (in the postwar decade) it was inevitable that business would slow up and the depression ensue.

"Our problem now is one of distribution of income. The most effective way of achieving a better balance is through income taxes."

Furthermore, he said, the Government must have complete control of credit at all times. Turning to the pending banking bill, he added:

"It is necessary for the Nation to control money in the public interest, and that is the sort of control this bill is designed to provide."

I. C. C. Control Of Truck-Bus Traffic Fought

Senate Inquiry's Witness Calls Commission Too Railroad-Minded.

Opposition to placing of interstate bus and truck regulation under control of a railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission as proposed in the recent Eastman recommendations was registered before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday by Herman Barnett, of Philadelphia, representing the Commercial Car Journal.

Mr. Barnett laid before the committee the results of a survey of transportation conditions in small Pennsylvania communities, indicating in some localities that four days are required to obtain freight by rail from communities 50 miles away. Many small communities situated off the railroads must obtain goods by truck from outside of the State, Mr. Barnett said, due to regulation of intrastate truck traffic by the Pennsylvania Public Service Commission in a way to suppress local truck operators.

In his reports filed with the committee, Mr. Barnett quoted the views of numerous business men who fear that Federal regulation of trucks would come under the hand of a board which has for years thought strictly in terms of railroads.

Arizona Will Send 'Envoy' to Capital

State Senate's Vote Favors Request of Governor.

By the Associated Press.

Phoenix, Ariz., March 6.—Gov. Moeur of Arizona was authorized by the State Senate today to send an "ambassador" to Washington to look after the State's interests.

A House bill appropriating $7,500 to pay the salary and expenses of the Governor's representative passed the Senate, 14 to 5.

"I need a man there every day," Gov. Moeur told members of the Senate. "Our business with the Federal Government is increasing all the time, and there are many errands our Senators and Congresswoman don't have time to run.

"Then, we want our share of any Government money that is to be passed around. And when I ask for something I want a man there who can stay on the job until the request is granted."

Parleys Abandoned For Wheat Control

London, March 6. (AP).—Representatives of the United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina today definitely abandoned negotiations for the control of wheat exports for the remainder of the present crop year expiring August 1.

Delegates said the reason for the abandonment was that Argentina had refused to consider her repudiation of the 1933 wheat pact.

Servant Reenacts Death of Heiress for Inquiry

Witnesses Who Testified Yesterday at Inquest—and Davidson's Daughter

Death Caused By Car's Fumes, Doctor States

Body Bruises Were Recent, He Says; Report on Autopsy Awaited.

Davidson's athletic prowess for the purpose of showing that it was not likely that a girl of such strength would have been trapped in a garage while monoxide gas fumes snuffed out her life.

Mr. Davidson, still wearing a somber garb, was recalled to the stand after Dr. Marr had left.

"How old are you?" Pruette asked.

"Forty-two."

"How old was Mrs. Davidson?"

"Twenty-two."

Davidson said he was divorced from his first wife last May on grounds of desertion. His wife, he said, brought the action.

"In speaking of partially supporting the children of that marriage," Pruette said, "you stated yesterday that you had a private income. What was the source of that income?"

"Several small securities."

"What was the income from them?"

"Negligible—$75 to $100 a month."

Resigned Baltimore Job.

He said he resigned his last job with a Baltimore oil company around Christmas time.

"How long had you been employed?" Pruette asked him.

"Less than a month."

Yesterday Davidson explained that he gave up his job because Miss Statler, to whom he had become engaged, expected him to live here after their marriage on January 3.

Today Davidson insisted that prior to his marriage he knew nothing of the million-dollar trust fund established for Miss Statler by her father.

The income from that fund was $2,500 a month.

"After the marriage," Pruette asked, "didn't she set aside $1,000 a month to your credit?"

"Yes."

Visit Davidson Home.

After Davidson had been excused, the coroner's jury, trailed by a curious crowd, journeyed to Edgewood, the Davidson home.

There they viewed the garage, a large structure with a capacity of five cars. Emanuel Birch, the Davidson butler, illustrated how he found Mrs. Davidson's body. While the jurors watched, he climbed halfway into the 12-cylinder convertible touring car. His head and shoulders were lying across the gear-shift lever and his legs dangled to the running board.

Davidson, with a pained expression, looked on.

The jurors tried the doors of the garage. They found them easy to operate

The morning session of the inquest was enlivened by the testimony of a local publicity man, Bernard Freeman. He was at the Pinehurst Country Club the last night Mr. and Mrs. Davidson were there and he also was with them until after 4 o'clock the next morning at an Italian spaghetti house.

He said he was sitting near Mrs. Davidson and heard her say:

"I am going to get tight."

Neither Freeman nor any of the other witnesses who saw Mrs. Davidson that morning, however, would say that she carried out her threat.

Debutante Testifies.

Miss Jane McMullen, a debutante of Pinehurst and Hyannis Port, Mass., who was in the party, said she saw Mrs. Davidson crying. Jane's sister, Isabel, said the heiress looked unhappy.

Solicitor Pruette asked each of the girls if there had been much drinking.

Jane blushed when he asked the question and admitted that she had a "small one." Her sister, however, frankly admitted that she had two.

Teddy Turner, a golf professional, who was in the party, said that all they had in his group was a pint among four persons.

Conflicting Testimony.

Earlier in the day there was a controversy over the veracity of a Washington reporter, Pat Frank, and Emanuel Birch, the Davidson butler.

Frank testified that Birch told him last Sunday that he had heard the Davidsons quarrel. This the little Negro denied, saying:

"I never heard them say a hard word."

Solicitor Pruette announced tonight that he expects the inquest to come to a close tomorrow. In outlining the evidence, he will tell the jury that it can find any one of four verdicts—murder by a specific person, murder by persons unknown, accident or suicide.

Opinion of Residents.

Few persons here think that Mrs. Davidson was murdered. At the same time, they find it difficult to believe that she would have committed suicide or that her death could have been an accident.

In connection with the suicide theory, they point out that Mrs. Davidson did not have on either stockings or underwear when her body was found. They find it hard to believe that a woman would so attire herself to commit suicide.

They discard the theory of accident by pointing to her physical strength. And nothing in the testimony here would indicate that this strength was lessened by too much drinking the night before. They believe that if she felt the monoxide gas overcoming her, she would have been able to clamber out of the automobile and open the garage door.

Physician's Report Awaited.

Much, of course, depends on the report to be made today on the condition of Mrs. Davidson's vital organs. This report will come from Dr. C. C. Carpenter, of the Wake Forest Medical School.

Dr. Marr, in his testimony today, said that the young woman's body was still warm when he arrived at the garage.

"How long do you think she had been dead?" he was asked.

"She was surprisingly warm. I think now that she had been dead at least a half-hour."

He told how, despite his belief that she was dead, he ordered her rushed to the county hospital so that the usual efforts could be taken to revive her.

He said that he concluded death was caused by carbon monoxide poisoning when he noticed that her skin was flushed.

By the Associated Press.

Pinehurst, N. C., March 6.—Birch, the butler, obviously was nervous as Pruette began questioning him.

The solicitor asked first about the car Birch used the morning of February 27 when he went uptown for the mail.

"Whose car did you use?" the solicitor asked.

"My own car."

"Where did you keep it?"

"In the back yard."

"That was near the garage.."

"Not so close."

"Did Mrs. Davidson take automobile drives at night?"

"Yes, she has; she did just before Christmas one night."

Birch added that he "didn't know whether she went for a drive at night since they were married."

"Have you ever heard the Davidson's quarrel?"

"I never heard them have cross words."

Birch's Opinion.

"Haven't you made the statement that Mrs. Davidson could not have fallen in the position you found her lying?"

"I have. She might have crawled into that position."

"Isn't it true that Mr. and Mrs. Davidson had a quarrel before leaving for the club that Tuesday night?"

"Not that I know of; no, sir."

Birch said he carried the key to the garage and was in it Tuesday, but didn't lock the door.

"The door has a handle that locks when you turn it and you have to have a key to open it," he added.

Birch left the stand at 10:30.

Testimony of Waiter.

John Notragiacomio, bushy-haired waiter at Montesanti's Spaghetti Camp, the second witness, said he knew both of the Davidsons well.

Pruette asked about the arrival of the party of 18 persons.

"They came in and sat around the fireplace in the dining room while the meal was being prepared," the waiter said.

"Does Montesanti have a bar?"

"Not a regular bar."

"I understand, it couldn't be in North Carolina," Pruette said, and the spectators laughed.

"Did you serve anything to drink?"

"Some wine, three bottles of claret."

"Some one had some whisky in a pint bottle," the waiter added.

"Did you notice anything about Mrs. Davidson's behavior that night?"

Says Heiress Cried.

"When I started serving spaghetti she was crying. She took out her handkerchief and wiped her eyes. Tears were profuse. Mrs. Herbert Vail (of Southern Pines) went over to her."

He said she cried for some time, he didn't know how long

"There were no other guests there. The party broke up around 5 o'clock," Notragiacomio said, "Mrs. Davidson was talking to Mr. Herbert Vail just before they left."

"They picked their own seats," the waiter said.

Nelson Hyde, Southern Pines newspaper publisher, then was called.

He was at the country club charity ball and at the spaghetti camp.

Plan for Spaghetti Party.

"The spaghetti party was planned at the club," Hyde said.

"Did you see anything to suggest that Mrs. Davidson was in an unhappy or despondent frame of mind?"

"I did not."

"No members of the party were perceptibly under the influence of whisky at the party?" he added.

"It was a dry and dull party then?"

"Except for an accordion player's numbers," Hyde said with a dry smile, and the spectators again laughed.

Bernard Freeman, Pinehurst publicity man, who attended both the ball and the spaghetti party, was next to testify.

J. M. Broughton, Raleigh attorney, representing the Statler interests, questioned him.

"There was no drinking whisky at Montesanti's," Freeman said, since there was no place to purchase it and you had to "bring your own."

Freeman said the party was not boisterous.

Jane McMullen Testifies.

Jane McMullen, of Hyannis Port, Mass., and Pinehurst, also testified that Mrs. Davidson was crying at the spaghetti camp.

"Mrs. Davidson's expression while crying at the table made me feel she was fairly morbid and depressed," she told the solicitor.

"She would stop crying and then start all over again. She wasn't crying until we sat down at the table."

Isabel McMullen, who was dressed in a bright yellow knitted blouse and a dark green skirt, followed her sister, Jane, to the stand.

"Was there any liquor at Montesanti's?" asked Pruette. As he questioned her he puffed on a cigarette and tilted back in a straight chair to an unstable angle.

"There wasn't any more liquor," she said. "They had had a couple of drinks before—that is, those we went to the party with."

She said she didn't notice Mrs. Davidson weeping or unhappy.

Reinecke on Stand.

Following Miss Isabel McMullen was John Reinecke, of Carthage, whose testimony was brief. He said he paid no particular attention to Mrs. Davidson at the party.

"I heard her request the accordion player to repeat one number," he said.

Freeman was recalled and testified he heard Mrs. Davidson say "I'm going to get tight" at a party that night.

Freeman said he saw her drink only wine, but that there was a highball in front of her on the table.

Freeman left the stand and Teddy Turner, of Plain Valley, N. Y., and Pinehurst, was called.

Turner said those in the party had a "good time," but it was not a "boisterous" occasion. He had paid no especial attention to Mrs. Davidson, he said.

He left the stand at 12.05 p. m. and the inquest was recessed until 1.45.

Earthquake in India.

Moradabad, India, March 6 (AP).—A violent earthquake of two minutes' duration drove panic-stricken inhabitants of this community from their beds early today. Buildings rattled and walls cracked.

Airmail Rate Low For Some Carriers

By the United Press.

Harllee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General, said yesterday the Postoffice Department was convinced that some of the rates paid airmail concerns were too low.

He added that if the Interstate Commerce Commission were given the power by Congress, as proposed by the department, to raise as well as lower airmail rates, the department expected that the commission would "in a number of cases allow increases."

"Even if the increase allowed were to go as high as $14,000,000," he said, "there would still be a large reduction in the per-mile mail pay as compared with the pay of a year ago when the average per-mile pay was 42 cents for 25,248 route miles and approximately 35,000,000 annual scheduled flying miles. At that time the appropriation was $15,000,000 and the department was expending $14,000,000."

Barrow Gangster Must Die.

Austin, Tex., March 6 (AP).—Another Barrow gangster must die. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed today the death penalty of Joe Palmer, convicted of murdering an Eastham prison farm guard in an escape engineered in January, 1934, by Killer Clyde Barrow, Southwest desperado since slain by officers in Louisiana.

of the Republic." Then after brief committal services the three volleys for a soldier will be fired. Taps will sound.

Praise Pour in From Country.

As his body lay yesterday at rest in the old-fashioned room, a steady stream of messengers brought words of praise, words which continually stressed his integrity, his honesty, his unflinching attitude toward life. These came from President Roosevelt, from those stern men who had sat with him in judgment upon the laws he had for so many years interpreted with individual liberality, and from those who had known him in the restful summers of his life when the cool breezes of the Atlantic swept across the rose garden of his Beverly (Mass.) estate.

President Roosevelt said the Nation had lost "one of its first citizens," who had led a "life of rare distinction—soldier, scholar, author, teacher, jurist, and gallant gentleman"—a personifier of "the finest American traditions."

The Supreme Court paused in its labors; in New York magazine presses turned out the words of Felix Frankfurter, his closest friend, written for the occasion of the birthday he did not live to see; in Beverly, winter residents talked about "the judge."

At the White House it was announced that Mrs. Roosevelt will attend the simple Unitarian services at All Souls Church on Sixteenth street at Friday noon, and that the President will stand bareheaded as the body of the jurist is lowered into a grave beside his wife at Arlington Cemetery and the rifles crack out their last farewell.

Tears Fill Hughes' Eyes.

Tears were in the eyes of kindly-faced Chief Justice Hughes when he made the following announcement as the Supreme Court convened: "It is my sad duty to announce the . . . close of a career of unique distinction, as patriot, scholar, judge. We have lost a great jurist and a noble friend."

The court was adjourned until noon today, at which time hearing of cases will be resumed until closing time. Then there will be no further sessions until noon Monday in order that the justices may attend the services.

Attorney General Cummings, who had visited the jurist during the last days of his illness, said that "the broad sweep of his scholarship and his unfailing devotion to the liberal tradition in law as in life will make him ever remembered."

Yesterday Mr. Cummings again visited the home to leave with Mr. and Mrs. Edward Holmes, closest relatives of the jurist, his personal condolences. Chief Justice Hughes also mounted the bare steps for the same purpose.

His Liberalism Praised.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said: "Holmes was an uncompromising liberal. Because of the advanced and liberal interpretation which he placed upon the Constitution, he inspired the masses of the people with new hope and with a new and more comprehensive understanding of the flexibility of the organic law of the Nation * * * He was beloved as a great judge possessed of a social vision, a great heart, a keen, penetrating and analytical mind. He stands in a class by himself because our Nation has produced but one who, serving in a judicial position, has been a consistent and uncompromising liberal."

High tribute to Mr. Holmes as a jurist and as a writer of world-wide influence on legal subjects was paid in Boston by Dean Roscoe Pound of the Harvard Law School, according to the Associated Press.

"It is not merely that Mr. Justice Holmes by universal consent ranks with a handful of the greatest judges who have sat on the bench in this country; his place is no less acknowledged among the greatest who have judged in the English-speaking world," he said.

"But his influence has been more than that of a great judge.

"If he ranks with Marshall as a maker of the Constitution, he ranks with Kent and Story as a molder of the thinking of lawyers and law teachers, and the combination is unique."

Other Dignitaries Comment.

Other comments by national figures were:

Speaker Byrns: "There was not a member of the Supreme Court who enjoyed to a greater extent the esteem, respect and confidence of the American people. There is behind him a great record and everyone, of course, will deplore his death."

Representative Taylor, of Colorado, acting House majority floor leader: "I can say, speaking for the West and for the lawyers, as well as the public generally, that they regarded him as one of the greatest legal minds, with a vast grasp of common humanity. They regarded him with profound respect and admiration. He combined a deep knowledge of the law with statesmanship, humanity and an interest in the welfare of the human race."

Representative Snell, of New York, House minority leader: "He was considered one of the greatest jurists in modern age and probably one of the most beloved members of the Supreme Court by the whole American people."

Senator Austin of Vermont: "The life of Mr. Justice Holmes was an example of patriotic citizenship which ought to stimulate the youth and steady and encourage the adult of present and future generations. Mr. Justice Holmes' contribution to the jurisprudence of the United States of America will continue to be a living force for the defense and promotion of human rights. To his opinions we will frequently go, as to 'the shadow of a great rock,' for security of property, liberty and life."

"Life Speaks for Itself."

Justice Stone of the Supreme Court: "His life speaks for itself. It was a wonderful career. There is nothing we could say that could add or detract from it."

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader: "Mr. Justice Holmes was a great man. He was great not only in service as a soldier and as a member of our Supreme Court, but also in the quick and comprehensive grasp of essential legal and social reforms. He witnessed and participated in many of the greatest movements connected with the history of our country. He enjoyed the confidence, the respect and the love of all who knew him."

Secretary Wallace: "One of the greatest men of our time—ever young in spirit and continually doing his part to mold the letter of the law to meet the spirit of a changing world."

W. H. Finckel, Patent Lawyer, Dies in Capital

Pneumonia Is Fatal to Native of District at Age of 83.

William Henry Finckel, sr., 83, probably the oldest practicing patent lawyer in the United States, died yesterday of pneumonia at his residence, 2509 Cliffbourne place northwest, after a brief illness. He was active in his work until a few days before his death, and went to his office as usual last Saturday.

Mr. Finckel was born in Washington January 4, 1852, and lived here throughout his life, except for a single year he attended the preparatory school which later became Gettysburg College.

Mr. Finckel was the son of the Rev. Samuel Finckel, pastor of the German Concordia Evangelical Lutheran Church, and Mrs. Harriet Keller Finckel. In his family there were 12 children, and he was the tenth. Of these, Mr. Finckel was the last to die.

In 1869, Mr. Finckel was graduated from Columbian College, now George Washington University, as bachelor of philosophy. He then began reading law in the office of Judge Andrew C. Bradley, and some time later opened his own office, where he specialized in patent law.

Friend of Noted Inventors.

Among his clients and friends Mr. Finckel numbered many of the Nation's most famous inventors. A member of the American Patent Law Association since 1898, Mr. Finckel served for many years as an official of that organization. He was president in 1909 and 1910.

Always active in church work, Mr. Finckel was a member of the Luther Place Memorial Church from the time of its foundation. He served as a deacon for a number of years, was superintendent of its Sunday school, an elder and president of the church council.

As director of the church choir when he was a young man Mr. Finckel met Miss Mary M. Davis. They married in 1880.

Mr. Finckel was active in the work of the Lutheran Home for the Aged, serving as its trustee and corresponding secretary, and as chairman of the building committee. He also was a member of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants.

Funeral Tomorrow.

Surviving are his daughter, Mrs. Harriet V. Greene, and his son, William H. Finckel, jr. He also leaves four grandchildren, James Sheppard Burruss, Mary Page Burruss, John V. Greene and Harriet Elizabeth Greene, and one great-grandchild, James Sheppard Burruss 4th.

Funeral services will be held at Luther Place Memorial Church tomorrow at 2 p. m. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

She Gets 80 Pct. for Life; at Her Death 2 Sons Share Property.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—Mrs. Sylvester W. Labrot was left the majority of her husband's estate during her lifetime in the will of the late financier, philanthropist and race horse owner, filed today in Anne Arundel County Orphans' Court.

Labrot, who died recently in New Orleans, bequeathed eight-tenths of his property to Mrs. Labrot during her lifetime and one-tenth each to his sons, William H. Labrot and Sylvester W. Labrot. Upon Mrs. Labrot's death the property will be divided equally between the two sons and their heirs.

W. H. Labrot said the family had not yet made any definite plans regarding the large racing stable which his father operated here.

"I can say only that all interests of my father are being carried on for the present at least," he said.

School Board Suit Heard in Frederick

Teacher Asks $1,350 for Breach of Contract.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., March 6.—The case of Olive E. Ehrhart, Carroll County music teacher, against the Carroll County Board of Education in which $1,350 is asked for alleged breach of contract, was argued before Judge Arthur D. Willard in the circuit court today.

Counsel for Mrs. Ehrhart claimed that complaints against her were no more than might have been cited against 75 per cent or even 90 per cent of the teachers of the county.

Following the argument Judge Willard held a decision under consideration.

Woman Driver Stands Indicted In Fatal Crash

Mary K. Meredith Cited by Grand Jury in Death of Educator, 81.

Mary K. Meredith, of 820 Varnum street northwest, was indicted for manslaughter yesterday in the traffic death of Frederick Treudley. The 81-year-old educator was fatally injured February 20 when struck at Fourteenth and E streets northwest by an auto.

Among others cited in the 45 indictments reported by the grand jury to Justice Jesse C. Adkins in District Supreme Court were eight men charged with gaming law violations, eleven men and women accused of violating the liquor taxing act and two companies which allegedly violated the petroleum code.

Witnesses testified the auto operated by Miss Meredith, who is 28 years old, did not come to a stop after Mr. Treudley was knocked down, but kept going until intercepted by a taxicab at Fourteenth and G streets.

Other Indictments.

Other indictments were based upon charges ranging from joy riding and non-support to first degree murder. There were 15 cases in which the grand jury refused to bring indictments.

A raid on February 14 of an athletic club at 1121 Fourteenth street resulted in the indictment of six men on gaming charges. Those named in indictments based on the raid were Morris Ewalt Irwin, Howard B. Hill, Warren W. Davis, Edward J. Gibson, Henry E. Sykes and Adolph Olewack.

In another gaming presentment the grand jurors charged Michael and Anthony Sesso with gaming-law violations. They were arrested as a result of a raid on a place near the Navy Yard. The presentment accuses the two of "numbers" operations.

Two violations of the petroleum code were charged against the Amato Coal Co. and the Esseno Auto Supply Co., after evidence had been uncovered that the coal company sold gasoline to cab drivers at a price slightly under that designated in the code. The Esseno company was alleged to have transgressed the code by cutting the price of oil 5 cents a gallon.

Murder Charged

A charge of first-degree murder was placed against Albert Preston, colored, who is alleged to have fatally shot Clarence Yancey, 29, also colored, after a dispute.

Those indicted, and the charges against them were: Leon Shore, nonsupport; Oscar Dukes, George S. Walker and James Powell, joy riding; Clinton Oswald Tolliver, Lilly Miller and Philip Santagata, grand larceny; James Jumper, Joseph J. Luizzi, Swanson Gunter, Rudolph Robinson, John Gorchester, John W. Gardner, Joseph Brooks, Carroll Hughes, Daniel Wood, Norman Carroll and Robert Smith, housebreaking.

Pritchard L. Reeves, robbery and assault with a dangerous weapon; Theodore Dorsey, Charles Scott, Barney Williams, James Smith, William D. Lindsay, Cecil Robinson, Richard T. Carter, Fred J. Calwell, Raymond Digg, William Parker and William H. Adderson, violation of the liquor-taxing act of 1934; Albert Preston, first-degree murder; Michael Sesso, Howard Benjamin Hill, Henry Edwin Sykes, Adolph Olewack, Morris Ewalt Irwin, Warren Washburn Davis, Anthony Sesso and Edward J. Gibson, gaming charges.

Murray Weinstein, forgery and uttering; Amato Coal Co., Inc., and Esseno Auto Supply Co., Inc., violation of section 3 (f) of the national industrial recovery act and Article V, rule 3, of code of fair competition for the petroleum industry.

Miss Perkins To Talk Today

Women's Conference Will Hear Labor Secretary in Richmond.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 6.—Women from five Southern States have begun arriving in Richmond for the Women's Regional Conference on Government, which opens tomorrow with Secretary of Labor Perkins as the principal speaker.

Miss Perkins will motor from Washington and will be met at Ashland by a welcoming party, who will escort her to the executive mansion here, where she will be the guest of Gov. and Mrs. Peery.

The Cabinet member will attend a luncheon at the John Marshall Hotel at 1 o'clock, where talks will be made by the Governor, the Mayor of Richmond and other prominent officials.

Those attending the conference will be entertained at a tea at the Governor's mansion from 4 to 5 o'clock.

Library Group to Meet In Silver Spring Today

A plan for tax support of the Silver Spring (Md.) Public Library will be adopted by the Silver Spring Public Library Association at a meeting at 8 p. m. today in Josiah Blair Community House. Recommendations of a committee appointed to study the situation will be submitted.

A tentative report by Stephen James, chairman of the committee, recommends that authority be sought from the Legislature for an enabling act to permit the county commissioners to assess a tax in the area served by the library.

The committee strongly favors the establishment of a county library with branches in the more populous districts, but feels that this plan, which calls for a general county tax is not feasible at this time. In addition to James, the committee is composed of Dr. L. M. Christie, Joseph C. Cissel, Mrs. Erskine Miller and Miss A. R. Hasse.

Joseph Bortner, 19, of Essex, near Baltimore.

J. Clinton Johnson, of Hurlock.

Young Wissinger died in a Baltimore hospital today. Six college mates and Dr. F. M. Miller, dean of men, rushed from Westminster to offer blood for transfusion, but the operation was not performed.

Wissinger received his injuries as the automobile in which he and five other Western Maryland students were returning from a basket ball game at Annapolis early today crashed into a telephone pole near Baltimore.

The other students, none of whom was seriously injured, were Thomas Shaw Diffendal, son of E. O. Diffendal, manager of the Westminster Democrat-Advocate; William J. Echard, Richard Troxell, Alvin Zepp and Gibbons Morrow.

Young Pratt and Vodopivic also died of injuries received while returning from a basket ball game last night. En route from Lonaconing to Cumberland, Vodopivic's automobile careened into a pole and culvert.

Bortner died today in Baltimore. He was run down while skating Sunday night. He was the second victim of the accident. His companion, Philip Jarmask, 14, was instantly killed.

Johnson was instantly killed last night by an automobile as he was walking home. The driver, Henry F. Willey, of Cambride, was exonerated.

'Sunkist' Cotton Crop Soars to New Record

By the Associated Press.

Bakersfield, Calif., March 6.—With a yield of 650 pounds of cotton per acre—an amount which local cotton experts believe to be a world record—the value of Kern County's 1934 cotton crop was set at $5,360,700 today with a production of 87,700 bales from 52,000 acres.

Farm Bureau officials said California's yield per acre throughout the State this season was 330 pounds per acre, the greatest per acre yield for any State in the Union.

Cotton men agree that the phenomenal yield, contrasted with an average of about a quarter of a bale to the acre for the Nation, is due to the use of one-variety pure seed cotton in California and the prevention of cross-pollination.

Crime Inquiry Ready to Quiz Police Captains

Miss Milliken to Testify as First of Several Before Committee.

Capt. Rhoda Milliken, the energetic commander of the Woman's Bureau of the police department, will head a parade of police captains before the House District Crime Investigating Committee when it resumes executive hearings at 1:30 p. m. today.

Miss Milliken is one of the early policewomen of the National Capital, having begun her career under the command of the late Lieut. Mina C. Van Winkle, who fought to establish the bureau and increase its power and prestige. Miss Milliken succeeded Mrs. Van Winkle as commander of the bureau. To the bureau is entrusted the handling of women prisoners and children taken in custody.

Capt. James E. Bobo, commander of the Second Precinct, is to be called next, and other commanding officers are to follow. Each is to be asked a series of questions about the efficiency of their commands, assignment of personnel, police records and qualifications and other matters.

Merits and defects in the present promotion system also are to come up. The Policemen's Association recently formally criticized the present system of giving efficiency ratings. These are given by officers for the men under their command. Ratings are inequitable, it is complained.

Calling of the police captains has been urged by some committee members who hope to get from them expressions of opinions and recommendations and information which will show defects and sore spots in the department as an organization and with regard to personnel. Such high hopes are not held, however, by persons experienced in past inquiries and preliminary protestations both by officers and policemen.

"They can bust me any day. Please don't put me on the spot," has been a common plea in private.

Suspects Free, Mystery Holds Car-Barn Case

Police Fail to Identify Two Held in Philadelphia for Killings Here.

An expected "break" in the investigation of January's double murder and $1,800 robbery at the Capital Transit Co.'s Chevy Chase (Md.) car barn, failed to materialize yesterday when witnesses were unable to identify two suspects arrested in Philadelphia, it was learned last night.

Detective Sergeant Frank O. Brass, with several Maryland investigators, returned to Washington yesterday after several weeks spent in an out-of-town search for suspects. Two men arrested in Pennsylvania, he said, were finally released for lack of identification. He said the suspects answered "general descriptions" of two men seen loitering near the Chevy Chase street car station a few days prior to the holdup and slayings.

Theories that an out-of-town gang, led by a known gangster wanted for similar offenses, was responsible for the crime have not been discarded, Brass reported. The suspect now sought is wanted by police of both Philadelphia and Chicago, it was learned.

James Mitchell and Emory Smith, night employes at the Transit barn, were shot to death defending their company's money. Mitchell was killed as he sat in his station office and Smith, "taken for a ride" after rescue efforts, was shot through the head and dumped into Rock Creek near Kensington, Md.

Suits for $80,000 Filed in Accident

Four persons injured in an automobile accident on the Arlington Bridge February 24, 1934, filed suits totaling $80,000 yesterday against Leonard Branneman, of the navy yard, driver of the automobile in collision with the complainants' vehicle.

Lloyd E. Layman, of Clarendon, Va., driver of the automobile allegedly struck by Branneman's car, asked damages of $10,000; his wife, Ruby C. Layman, $50,000; John Franklin Saunders and his wife, Virgie M. Saunders, both of Clarendon, passengers in Layman's car, $10,000 each.

It is charged Branneman drove negligently and caused the accident. Marcus Borchardt is counsel for the plaintiffs.

Give Them Clearness and Whiteness—Prevent Decay

MONDAY: YOU HAVE SOFT TEETH. CLEAN THEM MY WAY AND WATCH THEM IMPROVE!
TUESDAY: IT'S WONDERFUL. STAIN I THOUGHT NATURAL HAS GONE. MY TEETH LOOK BRIGHTER.
WEDNESDAY: I CAN'T TAKE MY EYES OFF YOUR MILLION-DOLLAR SMILE!

New, Different Cleansing Method Transforms Dull, Off-Color Teeth in a Hurry—Try It!

There is nothing that ruins a person's attractiveness like dull, off-color teeth. You see it in others when they smile. And it's inexcusable. For in most cases, teeth that look unclean are SOFT TEETH. They stain easily. Decay easily. They are a target for millions of germs that collect on them and hide their whiteness under a yellow film. They urgently need the special cleansing and whitening Kolynos gives to make them attractive.

This great discovery of N. S. Jenkins, D. D. S., gives teeth the clearness, lustre and whiteness they should have—prevents decay—by a unique method of cleansing. And does it surprisingly fast. Just a half-inch of Kolynos on a dry brush—without using water—MAKES TEETH LOOK AND FEEL CLEANER IN TWO MINUTES!

Stubborn stains and discoloration disappear. Millions of germs are killed and the yellow film they form is washed away. Teeth are cleaned as modern dental science says they should be cleaned—without injuring or scratching the thin, delicate enamel.

Soon—in 3 or 4 days—teeth lose that uncared-for look. They gleam like polished jewels. THEY HAVE SPARKLING WHITENESS THAT GIVES A SMILE CHARM AND ATTRACTIVENESS.

Now do this today: Get a tube of Kolynos from any druggist and learn why millions of people are giving up old-time brushing methods and are adopting it. Use as directed and see how much cleaner and whiter it makes your teeth. You will be delighted.

Substitute Plan For Health Unit Given Fairfax

Medical Society Proposes Abolition of 3 Posts Under Change.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 126-J.

The physicians of Fairfax County, Va., do not seem to be able to agree even among themselves as to the benefits of the county health unit. Yesterday the County Board of Supervisors received a plan from the Fairfax County Medical Society which would substitute the present set-up.

It was stated at yesterday's meeting that the plan submitted by the physicians was not the unanimous action of the society, but was approved by a slight majority. Dr. William Meyer and Dr. William F. Caton, of Lorton, appearing at the request of the board members, denounced the society proposal, declaring that it was not practical or feasible and did not believe it would work. Dr. Caton is a member of the county health board and was one of the first health officers in Fairfax County.

The plan submitted by the society calls for the abolition of the health director, sanitary inspector and clerk. It proposes that a county health board of three county physicians be appointed to act as quarantine officers with authority to appoint a deputy, each member to be appointed from a different magisterial district and from a list furnished by the society, they to be paid $5 for each visit as quarantine officers; two county nurses are to be employed, they to be selected by a committee from the county society, the chief nurse not to receive over $2,000 a year and the assistant not over $1,500. The nurses would arrange school clinics, keep health records, and work with the doctors in the care of indigent sick of the county and other duties assigned by the doctors.

Operation of Plan.

Local doctors indorsing ths plan would agree to conduct school clinics twice a year, inoculating the pupils against diphtheria and smallpox free, the county to pay for the materials used for indigent children. Pupils able to pay fees set by doctors will be charged regular medical fees set by the society as minimum fees.

The quarantine officer would receive a maximum of $400 annually, when the society states would make the total cost of the new unit approximately $3,900.

Dr. E. L. McQuade, of the State health department, told the supervisors that the State office has been exceptionally well pleased with the health work in Fairfax County and if the health unit is changed that no State or Federal funds could be appropriated for county health work. He declared that he did not believe the local doctors qualified to handle the county health work unless someone would devote his entire time to it. He told the supervisors that if they did not believe they were getting value received from the present health unit to do away with it and let the local doctors attempt to do the work. He advised against such action, however. He said that other counties in the State were begging for State aid for health work and that the present members of the county health office could be transferred immediately.

Ask Repairs in Court.

The Fairfax Chapter, United Daughters of America, and the Fairfax County Garden Club presented a request to have the interior of the circuit court room repaired and repainted and the portraits rehung. They stated that these improvements were indorsed by Judge Walter T. McCarthy of the circuit court.

A letter was read from Judge McCarthy to Mrs. Mary T. Barbour, of the club, in which he approved of the proposed work and stated further that he was convinced that the whole arrangement of the court room could be improved. He pointed out the lack of passage from the front to the back of the courtroom without passing the jury and witnesses, judge and attorneys, the lack of proper witness box and attorneys seats. Judge McCarthy classed the present jury chairs as unnecessary punishment of jurors, as they are immovable and uncomfortable. He stated that the other chairs in the courtroom were uncomfortable, some were unsafe and those bolted together, unfit for use of persons participating in jury cases.

The supervisors stated that during the summer months it is contemplated to make some change in the interior arrangement of the courtroom and to redecorate.

At the request of the town council of Clifton the jurisdiction of the county Trial Justice Court was extended into the town. The trial justice will now try cases for the violation of town ordinances as well as other violation of laws. The fines for violation of town ordinances will be returned to the town which will pay its proportionate share of the cost of the county court.

The county purchasing agent was authorized to replace the cement borrowed from the county school board.

Bonus Bill Approved

REP. FRED M. VINSON.

Committee Favors Vinson Bonus Bill

my bill. The Republicans decided it. They voted 6 to 1 for the Vinson bill.

"If we get a fair test we'll lick them. The Republicans just voted for the Vinson bill to put the President on the spot. Most of the six Republicans who sided with Vinson don't want the bonus at all. They just wanted to embarrass the Administration."

Though he smiled broadly, Vinson withheld comment on the Ways and Means Committee vote. Observers expected the final showdown to be exceedingly close. The House is overwhelmingly for full bonus payment, but it will have a merry time deciding which plan to approve.

Formidable support for the Vinson scheme has been offered by the American Legion. Its officers have assailed the Patman plan as inflationary and objectionable to the Senate, where bonus sentiment, though strong, is not overwhelming.

Patman followers found solace in the committee vote by predicting their measure, when offered as a substitute on the floor, would be the first to draw a roll call. They pointed out many disinterested members have promised to vote for the first bonus bill advanced. Others, they said, would not wish to be in the position of having voted against any veterans legislation.

Van Zandt Confident.

James E. Van Zandt, Veterans of Foreign Wars commander, said the committee's indorsement of the Vinson bill was engineered by opponents of the bonus.

"They voted for the Vinson bill," he charged, "because they felt it was the easiest way to kill all so-called bonus legislation at this session of Congress.

"But we have the assurance of Speaker Byrns and leaders of the House that there will be an opportunity to vote for the Patman bill on the floor and we are confident that it will be passed."

The committee roll call:

Democrats—Hill, Washington; Cullen, New York; Sanders, Texas; McCormack, Massachusetts; Fuller, Arkansas; Disney, Oklahoma; Lamneck, Ohio; Duncan, Missouri; Thompson, Illinois; Dingell, Michiga. Republicans—Knutson, Minnesota.

For the Vinson bill:

Roosevelt Ends 'Inflation Rally' In the Markets

modity price level now stands at 79.6, compared to 78.4 a year ago, and to 60.2 when the Administration took office in March, 1933. The year 1926 is used as 100, but Mr. Roosevelt has been at some pains to explain that he does not, necessarily, consider this year a goal.

Because of the marked advance in prices, it was with an attitude of expectancy that correspondents attending the President's press conference awaited his reply to a question if he thought prices had gone high enough to be stabilized.

His answer was in the negative. He declared that, in his opinion, the dollar had not shrunk in relation to debts as far as it should. The situation had been relieved enormously, he continued, but the debt column—as he expressed it—has not been lowered enough.

"Denial" of Devaluation.

In reply to a further inquiry as to whether this meant further devaluation of the dollar, the President threw up his hands and vigorously shook his head. There was some disagreement if he actually uttered a denial, but those in the forefront understood that the President indicated a negative reply.

A few minutes later, however, the White House news ticker pounded in word of a $1 to $4 jump in stocks, and of a bullish market in grains. More disturbing was the news that Government bonds were dropping. The flurry was caused, reports said, because of traders' interpretation of the President's remarks.

The White House at once issued a denial, which said:

"Any inference that has been or may be printed that there is any contemplation of devaluing the dollar is, of course, not true insofar as anything the President said at his press conference is concerned and is made out of whole cloth. Nothing the President said bore the slightest suggestion of anything of that sort."

Reaction set in and stocks and staples sold off. Wheat went from ¾ to 1⅛ cents below the close of the day before, and corn followed suit. Bond trading on the New York exchange totaled $26,690,000, mostly in Governments, which was the heaviest trading in bonds since August 9.

Seeks a Balance.

Mr. Roosevelt's comments on prices did little to clear the air of speculation over the next monetary move. Nor did he indicate how high he thinks prices should move. Commodity prices have been moving ahead steadily since last fall and are now at the highest stage in four years. Food prices have led the advance, rising about one-fourth since last year.

The White House denial appeared to establish, however, that he has no plans for the present to devalue the dollar below its present 59-cent level. Under authority delegated him by Congress he can lower the dollar to 50 cents, in terms of gold, which leaves him a 9-cent trading margin.

The theory behind the President's desire for higher prices is that higher prices ease the burden of debt in this country. For example, a farmer who mortgaged his home when wheat brought $1.50 a bushel finds his debt doubled, in effect, when wheat brings half that amount. By coaxing up prices and easing the repayment of debts through such agencies as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Administration is attempting to bring the two into balance.

Meantime, Senator Elmer Thomas, the Oklahoma inflationist, called his monetary conference together to urge immediate circulation of $4,300,000,000 in new money. Denying this would constitute inflation, he said the Treasury has enough gold and silver to back such an expansion.

The conference went on record in favor of central bank legislation, which would give the Government ownership of the Federal Reserve banks. Two members of the group—Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale, and Robert Hemphill, financial writer—conferred with Mr. Roosevelt during the morning, but were silent on leaving the White House.

Senator Thomas declared that the present purchasing power of the dollar is $1.256. The 25.6 cents is a "subsidy to bondholders," he said, urging that every effort be made to erase it.

This Time Curiosity Sent Out Riot Squad

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, March 6.—Detective Inspector Robert A. McPherson, newly assinged to headquarters, was impressed by the array of buttons on the bureau's big central desk. He pushed one.

In a moment the startled force leaped for guns and riot equipment and swarmed out of the building to answer the earsplitting alarm.

Tax 'Pink Slip' Faces Repeal By Congress

much loose rope to gossipy snoopers, and to persons who might use this information for criminal ends," he said.

"I think a substitute plan can be drawn that will satisfy legitimate publicity requirements, without promoting its illegal use."

Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), New York, reiterated what he told the Senate Finance Committee—that "the law makes Uncle Sam 'finger man' for bandits, kidnapers and crooks." Copeland is sponsoring a Senate bill which repeals the pink-slip requirement, but continues in force the 1926 publicity law.

Discretionary Power Given.

This is precisely what the bill approved yesterday by the House Ways and Means Committee does, leaving the President and Secretary of the Treasury with discretionary power to make income-tax returns public. The Treasury Secretary has been called on for an opinion on the House bill. Senate action must originate in the Senate Finance Committee, whose chairman, Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, is opposed to repeal. A sub-committee named by Harrison conferred with House members recently, and reputedly poured cold water on repealer hopes.

Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, chairman of the subcommittee, is among those who frowns on repeal. Two members of his sub-committee, however, Senators Robert La Follette, of Wisconsin, and James Couzens, of Michigan, who formerly took the same view, are now reported willing to accept a publicity substitute.

A few Senators favoring a pink-slip repealer take this stand in hopes of getting a stronger publicity law. This attitude was summed up yesterday by Senator Hugo Black (Democrat), Alabama.

"I would vote for repeal in a minute if I thought we could get something better," he said.

A number of robins have been seen here this week. They, too, are considered harbingers of spring.

'Range War' Killer Arrested in Texas

By the Associated Press.

Sulphur Springs, Tex., March 6.—A widespread search for the suspected killer of two stockmen in a Utah range war ended today when it was learned that Clinton Palmer, arrested here for a Texas slaying, was the fugitive.

Sheriff Clint Reneau announced that Palmer, known in Utah as James C. Palmer, had admitted orally to him the slaying of one of the stockmen, William E. Oliver, 70.

The bodies of Oliver and his grandson, Norris Shumway, 24, were found at the foot of a cliff in the San Juan River Valley of Utah. Their bodies were brought into Blanding, Utah, yesterday.

After a 28-mile automobile chase into the Sulphur River bottoms yesterday, Palmer was caught by officers here. With him were a woman and a girl. Two rifles and a pistol were in the car.

LOST 30 POUNDS!

I'm one of those people who can't resist rich foods. Dieting is torture. Nor can I exercise. It exhausts me. And when I take drastic purgatives, I'm weak, lifeless, drained of vitality. So, I grew heavier and heavier, until I learned of a simple corrective for abnormal obesity known and prescribed by physicians the world over, and put up in convenient tablets containing the right amount.

I tried it . . . took 4 Marmola tablets a day . . . did not go on a diet . . . yet lost 30 pounds. And I never felt better.

Thousands who have taken Marmola as directed, might well tell you this and similar stories if they had the chance.

For this simple corrective is the chief active ingredient of Marmola, prepared in tablet form by one of the leading medical laboratories of America. You simply take a tablet of Marmola 4 times a day and start at once to get rid of burdensome fat.

Since 1907, more than 20,000,000 packages of Marmola have been purchased—and what greater recommendation can be had?

Today—buy a package of Marmola, and start at once. You will soon experience Marmola's benefits. When you have gone far enough, stop taking Marmola. And you will bless the day when you first learned about this wonderful reducing agent!

Farley Balked Scandal Probe, Long Charges

to be the dictator of Louisiana, but other jurisdictions as well," Senator Robinson recalled the Long threat to defeat him for reelection.

"If I have to continue to look at the Senator from Louisiana every day," the leader continued, "if I have to hear him speak three or four times a day, as I have in the past few months, if I have to listen to him criticizing and condemning everyone who does not agree with him, I think it would be a God-send to me if in some way I got out of the Senate."

"Until now I didn't know whether I would run for the governorship of Louisiana or for the Senate," Senator Long retorted. "I now announce I'll run (in 1936) for reelection."

"The last time I heard from the Senator he was running for Governor," asserted the Arkansan. "The next to the last time he was running for President. Now he is running for the Senate."

"God Help the Senate!"

"Then there was not such public service that could be done by coming back to the Senate as there is now," shouted the "Kingfish."

"God help the Senate!" asserted Senator Robinson.

So the exchanges went, but without the fire and heat that marked the Robinson-Long clash Tuesday—much to the disappointment of galleries crowded to the last inch. Senator Robinson's manner was of good humor as he obviously made efforts to keep the debate on a light level.

Unlike the situation for some time since Congress has struggled with economic and financial problems, the Senate in the last few days has been surcharged with a distinctly partisan political atmosphere. Wrangling between Democrats and Republicans has become more frequent. Senator Daniel O. Hasting (Republican), of Delaware, for instance, yesterday raked the Roosevelt Administration in a reply to a radio broadcast of Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper. Senator McKellar hit back at Hastings.

Fight on Lone Wolves.

The movement just getting started to battle such lone wolves of politics as Senator Long and Father Charles E. Coughlin, the potential leaders of a third party, has injected an unusual but active political interest into the Senate. Senator Long is fighting back. He will take his fight to the country tonight.

In a Nation-wide radio broadcast Senator Long is expected to strike back at Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former NRA administrator, who Monday night started the present fighting when he assailed the "Kingfish" and Father Coughlin as the "pied pipers of politics" and as demagogues.

Father Coughlin last night announced he had obtained radio time Monday night to make his reply to Gen. Johnson. Meanwhile that old foe of the former NRA chief, Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, is preparing to come to the priest's defense in the Senate.

Gen. Johnson is being swamped with congratulatory and denunciatory messages, the Associated Press reported. One from Joseph P. Tumulty, of Washington, secretary to President Woodrow Wilson said, "Every Roman Catholic in the country feels under a great obligation to you for the magnificent speech of last night." Mr. Tumulty is a Catholic.

1936 Skirmishing Starts.

Thus the skirmishing for the 1936 campaign has got underway some months earlier than usual and, while lulls may come in the controversy, it is expected to continue for the next 20 months.

An audible buzz in the galleries broke the silence of the Senate as Senator Long, sartorially resplendent, as usual, strode into the chamber a few minutes after the body convened. It was clear the crowd had come to see and hear him.

His impatient actions indicated an eagerness to respond to such an audience. He broke into Senator McKellar's reply to the Hastings speech to assert "there is no difference" between President Roosevelt and former President Hoover, except a bigger deficit. He interjected a few more remarks and finally got the floor in his own right.

Reply to Committee

He had the clerk read a letter he had just sent to the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee replying to a demand that he be "more specific" and name his witnesses in his charges against Mr. Farley.

In his letter the "Kingfish" said he was sure the committee would not want him "to expose all witnesses and persons who are prepared to give testimony with regard to Mr. Farley, but who must of necessity be protected if there is to be an investigation."

He complained that already "witnesses have been hounded, telephones have been tapped, every device and scare-cloud used to browbeat and intimidate witnesses against the production of such facts" as he had alleged. If the investigation is ordered, he wrote, "proof will follow in rapid consequence."

He said some of his witnesses had asked that their names be kept secret until they were summoned and sworn and that many of his charges could be substantiated by examination of public and private records.

Senator Long said he would be "specific," however, to the extent of detailing certain charges and naming some witnesses. He reiterated his charge that Mr. Farley had profited through connection with companies, once verging on bankruptcy, dealing in matters in which the Federal Government was identified. He proposed calling the officers of such companies and also officers of contracting companies which he alleged obtained Government work when they purchased material from the Farley concern.

Witnesses Suggested.

The letter proposed the summoning of PWA inspection engineers to substantiate his charges. He also proposed that New York Park Commissioner Robert Moses be called for questioning regarding this aspect of his charges. Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes several weeks ago demanded the removal of Mr. Moses from the Tri-Borough Bridge Authority, in New York, a PWA project.

Senator Long reiterated his charge that Mr. Farley had suggested to a Baltimore & Ohio Railroad official, while a $52,000,000 RFC loan for that carrier was pending, that he had better support Clem Shaver in a Democratic primary for the Senate in West Virginia. Aside from proposing the summoning of a B. & O. official, unnamed, he proposed calling witnesses identified only by the letters "A" and "B."

He referred to another charge that Mr Farley, who is Democratic national chairman, had obtained a $1,000 political contribution from a Texan facing court charges. The "Kingfish" asserted that the witnesses in that incident had been "set upon" by postal inspectors, at direction of Mr. Farley, and they had been given "a scare, their records and papers called for and all such manner of things done as to prevent the disclosure of the facts."

Senator Long proposed that Richard M. Atkinson, former attorney general of Tennessee; Wayne Williams, former Federal attorney there; A. V. McLane and "many others, including four former members of the Federal grand jury," be called to testify regarding an inquiry into the affairs of the American National Bank, Nashville, Tenn.

The letter alleged that "one Paul N. Davis, and his brother, Norman Davis, organized many groups for floating and financing matters and concerns, including the American National Co." and that "through multifarious violations of the law, stockholders of the bank were caused to lose large sums of money" and that "the said multifarious concerns organized and floated through the said banks blew up in smoke with a terrible loss to everybody, except the Davis brothers and their inside associates."

"Inquiry Hushed Up."

The "Kingfish" further alleged that "hundreds of forgeries, erasures, false statements, publications and representations were made by the said Davises and their associates."

The letter asserted that the Government started a prosecution of this matter and the Federal attorney in Nashville "declared that indictments must be had immediately."

The letter continued as follows:

"There suddenly stepped into the picture James A. Farley, who immediately began to maneuver the personnel and conduct of the personnel of those connected with the Department of Justice having the matter in hand, both in person and through agents whom he selected, and as a result thereof on the eve of the matter being presented to the United States grand jury in Nashville, the United States attorney was removed and a special man sent at Farley's instance from Washington, D. C., who went before the United States grand jury and made a long and vigorous speech as to the harm it would do to have the individuals guilty of violating the law indicted; that said agent, after making said address to the grand jury for more than one hour, called several witnesses to be heard, interfered with their testimony and threw the matter out within a day's time.

"The said witnesses have in their possession and have exhibited to me, Huey P. Long, photostats and innumerable documents and records and point to the source where others may be had, showing the admitted state of affairs, showing rampant violations of the law, protected in the manner aforesaid."

Ralph W. Thomas, of Brentwood, Md., was held up and robbed of $35 yesterday in a house in the 100 block of C street southeast, he told police. The thief then taped Thomas' hands to a bed, gagged him, and left, saying he would be in Boston by nightfall.

Takoma Park Election Law Changes Asked

Bills Affecting Charter Are Introduced by Prescott at Annapolis.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—Bills to amend sections of the Takoma Park charter, affecting elections, were introduced today by Senator Stedman Prescott (Democrat), Montgomey.

Each board of supervisors of elections would have authority to procure an official seal to authenticate official papers and documents of its board, under the first bill.

Montgomery County would be exempt from requirements of posting names registered or erased in each precinct for election if the second bill is passed.

The other measure, relative to Takoma Park, would:

Prescribe additional requirements for voters at municipal elections.

Provide for election of three town councilmen for one year on first Monday in May.

Direct municipal government to take the town census and divide the town into wards.

Provide for election of mayor and councilmen on first Monday in May, 1936.

Establish polling places in each ward.

Provide for the nominations of mayor and councilmen in 1936.

Provide for general registration by wards prior to 1936 election.

Require publication of auditor's report and recommendations.

Require bond or collateral security for deposits of town funds in banks.

Prohibit municipal government from being interested in contracts for personal gain and providing punishment.

Direct mayor and council to levy tax for support of town volunteer fire department.

Require treasurer of fire department to submit report of expenditures.

Authorize county board to collect special fire protection tax within ninth election district for the fire department.

Authorize semiannual payment of town taxes.

Direct municipal government to proceed with public improvements by petition of property owners representing 2-3 of assessable footage abutting public improvements.

timated that 5,400,000 families averaging four to a family and 775,000 single persons were on relief.

Arkansas Relief Withheld.

Funds were withheld from one State, Arkansas, pending compliance with the relief administration's requirements that it put up $1,500,000 during the coming year.

Money for the first 15 days of March was promised Minnesota after enactment of an act increasing its contribution and Hopkins renewed his warning that Ohio must furnish $2,000,000 a month.

Senator Byrd said he had information that more than half of the original $3,300,000,000 appropriation remained unspent and that if this was so, $4,000,000,000 more for public works is entirely too much.

Byrd's resolution, among other things, called for:

Total cash disbursed by the Public Works Administration to March 1, 1935, and balance unexpended.

A list of projects on which disbursements have been made, the amount disbursed and an estimate of the cost of completing each.

A list of future allocations, a list of allocations of money that has been diverted to other departments and the amounts spent on labor in connection with the program.

the same result he contemplated might be obtained by retaining the provision for dissolution of the holding companies by 1940.

"If we pass only a regulatory bill, we would be in a manner saying this thing was all right," Rayburn observed.

Meanwhile, Philip H. Gadsden, chairman of the Committee of Public Utility Executives, said in a statement that the amendments proposed by Healy do not change the "destructive character of the bill."

"They are of such a nature, however, as to seem to give both the investors and consumers a false sense of security," he said.

"The fact is that few operating companies could survive as private enterprises under this bill, even if the provisions dealing with the holding company were eliminated."

Thomas Scott Is Sued by Wife Over Payments

Action Charges He Owes $1,500 by Separation Agreement.

The District Supreme Court was asked yesterday to compel Thomas A. Scott, son-in-law of Dr. William Holland Wilmer, internationally known eye specialist, to live up to the terms of a separation agreement he entered into with his wife, Mrs. Rebekah Wilmer Scott, of 2101 R street northwest.

Mr. Scott, who lives at the Metropolitan Club, was charged with failure to remit to his estranged wife the $500 monthly payments he consented to pay in the separation papers.

Mrs. Scott claimed she had received nothing from her husband for three months and, through her counsel, Edmund L. Jones, filed suit for $1,500. A copy of the agreement, attached to the suit, disclosed the Scotts agreed in May, 1934, to live apart. The husband was to pay $500 a month for the support of his wife and their two children.

The agreement was to continue in force for three years, with the proviso that in the event the Government brought about currency inflation, there was to be a readjustment of the monetary settlement.

Charge of Beer Selling Against Grocer Quashed

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., March 6.—J. H. Robinson, local grocer, who pleaded guilty to the sale of home-brew beer, was permitted to change his plea by the court yesterday and the charge against him was nolle prossed by the State's attorney.

Robinson contended he had made the home brew for his own use and the court pointed out the grocer had a license to sell beer at the time of the alleged violation.

Mrs. Kretz died Tuesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Guy G. Gilcrest, 1322 Madison street northwest, with whom she made her home. She was widely known in Washington, where she lived since the death of her husband.

*LOSING YOUR HAIR?

Too bad so many men become prematurely bald without trying this inexpensive treatment to ward it off. Ask any druggist for a 60c bottle (Economy size, $1) of Japanese Oil, the antiseptic counter-irritant. Use it as directed. You'll be amazed at the way it makes loose dandruff vanish, stops scalp itch and where hair roots are not dead, grows strong, healthy hair on thin and partially bald spots. Try it for 30 to 60 days. You have little to lose and a great deal to gain.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1935 C. M. Co.

Tweedledum And Tweedledee.

The House is always willing to pass bonus bills. It cares little or nothing about the details of such measures so long as they call for a generous handout. The Senate can be depended upon to defeat the more absurd proposals and behind the Senate looms the Executive veto power. Consequently, the House with happy irresponsibility can reaffirm its obsequious loyalty to the lobby.

However, a somewhat anomalous situation confronts that body now. Rival veteran camps have locked horns over methods of financing premature liquidation of the bonus certificates. The House Ways and Means Committee raised no question whatever as to the desirability—from the political viewpoint, of course—of reporting a bonus bill. Its dilemma lay in the selection of the measure from which the greatest dividends could be expected on election day.

While the committee has shown a slight partiality to the Vinson bill, sponsored by the American Legion, it is also smoothing a path to the floor for the Patman inflationary bonus nostrum. Then Congressmen will be able to take their choice. No doubt many a conscientious lawmaker is lamenting his inability to vote for both bills.

The House long ago gave up consideration of the equities in the bonus controversy. Likewise it has passed by the problem of raising the more than $2,000,000,000 involved. The chief objective of the bonusites is passage of a measure that will satisfy the clamor of lobbyists. Senator Tydings' reasonable proposal to give the veterans the current value of their certificates received virtually no consideration.

Unfortunately the row within the bonus ranks can not be expected to arrest the stampede. The Patmanites would rather see the Vinson bill win than to vote against the bonus. Most of Mr. Vinson's supporters would rather risk inflation of the currency than the wrath of a pampered lobby. As a result the Senate must again face up to the responsibility of defeating this selfish and dangerous measure.

The New Work-Relief Bill.

Six weeks ago the Senate Appropriations Committee was mulling over the undecipherable outlines of the Administration's work-relief program, trying in vain to ascertain how the President expected to spend the $4,880,000,000 he had requested. During the last few days the committee has repeated its procedure, finally reporting out a revised measure that warrants consideration. In the meantime much valuable time has been wasted and the prestige of the Administration has been seriously impaired.

If the President had originally sent to Capitol Hill a measure even comparable to the undistinguished bill which the Appropriations Committee has now drafted, it probably would have been enacted with only negligible opposition. For the Senate has not opposed work-relief as such. It very properly opposed the Administration's "plan" until some description of the proposed expenditures, however general, was vouchsafed. It is salutary for the Administration to learn that the Senate will not sign blank checks at the crack of a White House whip.

In its amended form the work-relief resolution will probably be enacted, although there is still about it much which is distasteful. A number of Senators have apparently agreed to withdraw their opposition to the bill in return for "assurances" that favored projects in their States will be financed. A measure which smells of "pork" at its initiation is not likely to become more savory during its operation.

Moreover, the skeletonized outline of expenditures written into the measure by the committee is far from being a comprehensive public works program. Almost anything might be included under such headings as "projects for professional and clerical persons" and "rural rehabilitation." Likewise funds for "public projects of States and local governments" might be spent in completely unpredictable ways. Will the States make any contributions, or will advances by the Federal Government constitute outright gifts? The measure still leaves many fundamental questions unanswered.

It is an indictment of the original bill, not a tribute to the present measure, to say that the latter represents a notable improvement over the impossible grant of power originally requested by the President. For the most part the type of work now specified would not hamper the recovery of private enterprise. It should now be harder to camouflage military expenditures as public works, though express prohibition of such practices would be desirable. And if expenditures on State and local projects are limited to undertakings carefully investigated and sponsored by the National Resources Board or other competent agencies, some really constructive public works activity may be anticipated.

The Senate must decide whether its valid objections to the original work-relief scheme have been sufficiently overcome to justify acceptance of the present compromise. But even if it concludes that the Administration's program is now definite enough to warrant approval, the wisdom of spending billions in this manner will remain open to question. Certainly the country must be prepared for a lessening of unemployment which will seem very inadequate as compared with the outlay contemplated.

Cart Before Horse.

Testifying before the House Banking Committee, Gov. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board described the omnibus banking bill of 1935 as a measure intended to force the banks to resume lending. Otherwise, he warned—or threatened—"they might find that the Government has taken over their business."

Unless the banking system of the country is to be used as an instrumentality for bringing about credit inflation, it must be asked what purpose would be served by urging the banks to force loans upon reluctant borrowers or to make advances of doubtful soundness. And, in practice, any pronounced expansion of commercial loans under existing conditions would entail the assumption of considerable risk. Already former tests of eligibility for discounting purposes have been dispensed with in the emergency; yet excess reserves of member banks continue to pile up for lack of safe lending outlets.

That the difficulty lies with borrowers, not with lending agencies, has been strikingly demonstrated by an investigation into the experiences of the RFC and the Federal Reserve Banks in granting direct loans to industry for working capital purposes. A survey made for the Treasury Department exonerated these Government agencies from charges of niggardliness in dealing with applicants for industrial loans. The investigators, although in favor of liberalization of the banking laws, admitted that the amount of unsatisfied demand from solvent borrowers for working capital purposes "is considerably smaller than is popularly believed," although they considered it large enough to have some influence.

Unless Government agencies are to regard liberalization of the banking laws as authorization for taking decidedly greater risks, it is therefore difficult to understand how a statutory change will have much effect upon present lending policies. Furthermore, the greater the activity of the alphabetical lending agencies becomes, the less incentive there is for private banks to expand commercial loans independently. It should be remembered that the banks of the country are, according to recent estimates, already holding about 50 per cent of the entire interest-bearing debt of the Federal Government.

As the Government issues additional billions of securities, either for direct financing of current expenses or for the purpose of assisting individuals and corporations, the opportunities for expansion of private commercial loans will be correspondingly restricted. Moreover, the assumption that banks can force credit into use ignores the fact that solvent borrowers must be found who are capable of making good use of advances. The banks will have no difficulty in justifying their existence, whenever business conditions warrant an expansion of loans. To try to anticipate such demands is not only putting the cart before the horse, it is also a direct invitation to reckless credit expansion of an inflationary type.

Large excess reserves and low interest rates are a potential menace to banking stability which might become an active danger if the banks were to respond to demands to justify their existence by forcing credit upon business. A mere change in legislation will not supply any inducement to loan expansion to careful bankers unwilling to risk loss of their depositors' resources. It is more likely to create anxiety among those who realize the price that would have to be paid ultimately if an uncontrollable expansion of credit should get under way.

Ready For The Spark.

Great Britain has added some $20,000,000 to her 1935 army budget estimates and the fact will be freely used to bolster the arguments of the military-minded everywhere. It may be noted in passing that the increase will not masquerade as public works expenditures, but will be voted on by Parliament for what it is. Such is the British political tradition. And such was once the honorable custom in this country.

Prime Minister MacDonald, in presenting the plan of increase to Parliament, explained that it is necessitated by Britain's growing sense of insecurity. Specifically, he referred to German rearmament, recalling Mr. Stanley Baldwin's frank admission of some months ago that England's frontiers are no longer marked by the Channel but by the Rhine. Unfortunately the stubborn Germans seem to dislike such unilateral frontier expansions, and by the same token argue that their frontier of defense is somewhere over Britain or France.

The British White Paper refers also to the increased armament appropriations in Russia, Japan and the United States as further reasons for England's mounting apprehension. Thus the vicious circle runs: France fears Germany; Germany fears Russia; Russia fears Japan; Japan fears the United States and Russia, and now Great Britain fears Germany, Russia, Japan and the United States. Of course, this is gross simplification of the total sum of all the fears. But it is enough to indicate the merry powder mine in which the family of nations is doing an exciting, though scarcely salubrious, torch dance.

Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"He is today for all students of the law and for all students of human society the philosopher and the seer, the greatest of our age in the domain of jurisprudence, and one of the greatest of the ages."

These words written before his retirement from the Supreme Court by his successor on that bench, Mr. Justice Cardozo, come perhaps as close as words can to catching something of the meaning of the career of Oliver Wendell Holmes.

That mortal career, now closed almost on the eve of his ninety-fourth birthday, links the beginnings of the Republic with the present. Son of the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, he was born in the heyday of New England's cultural dominance, when John Quincy Adams, who as a boy of seven had watched the Battle of Bunker Hill, was still a member of the House of Representatives, when Henry Clay and John Calhoun were in the Senate. It was at the end of the Jackson era. There were 26 States in the Union. A young lawyer, unknown beyond the wilderness that was then Illinois, was riding the circuit. His name was Abraham Lincoln.

Reared in the Puritan traditions of Back Bay Boston, the young Holmes had a rare heritage enriched by boyhood association with the celebrated men of the day, notably Emerson, from whom, as has been said, he "drew a priceless intellectual ferment." It was, however, the Civil War—he was thrice wounded, once it was supposed mortally—that set fiercely burning within him those spiritual fires which illuminated all his writings and warmed so many successive generations of young men, by whom he was always especially beloved.

His place in history scarcely can be assessed in his own times. Nevertheless by his own profession he has been placed beside Marshall, rated in his lifetime the greatest jurist in the English-speaking world. He lived to hear these high praises—to hear himself exalted as historian, scholar, literary craftsman, a "great liberal, a lover of freedom and its apostle." Yet these are among those labels which he was fond of dissolving in the acid of his urbane skepticism. Slogans, symbols, however apt, can not capture his spirit. "We feel in the things he has done and thought and felt," wrote Harold Laski, "something of that rare beauty which justifies the mystery of life."

Beyond the "winged sentences" in his "long and honorable record of dissenting opinions," beyond his classic Common Law, beyond the spoken and written words of his half century as jurist, rose always that fluttering pennon which he once advised law students to keep ever before their eyes to symbolize ideals and honor. Men will, indeed, be moving to the measure of his thought a century hence. They will long take courage from a life for which that Greek epitaph quoted at the presentation of his portrait to the Harvard Law School is uniquely appropriate:

A shipwrecked sailor buried on this coast
Bids thee take sail.
Full many a gallant ship, when we were lost,
Weathered the gale.

President Masaryk.

A professor of philosophy who is president of a republic today celebrates his eighty-fifth birthday. He long ago won wide repute as an academician, and he has now for seventeen years received acclaim as the capable head of a prosperous state which requires of its chief executive the most delicate manifestations of statecraft.

Thomas G. Masaryk is intellectually a remarkable combination of the scholar and the politician. By ancestry he is also a fitting director of his country's destinies. His mother was Czech, his father Slovak. The son began his career as a member of the faculty of the University of Prague and, save for a brief excursion into politics during the early nineties, buried himself in philosophical studies until the outbreak of the World War brought practical opportunities for the organization of revolt against the Austro-Hungarian Empire. When this revolt became revolution, and revolution realized its ideal in 1918, he was chosen to head the new republic of Czechoslovakia.

President Masaryk did not become a world figure until he had reached an age at which most men are thinking of retirement. Now, at 85, he continues to prove himself one of the most subtle of modern diplomatists. A prominent clause in Czechoslovakia's constitution forbids its chief executive more than two terms in succession. But it is not surprising that this provision has been continuously suspended in the case of Dr. Masaryk.

"A lion is harmless as long as he is occupied," says Clyde Beatty. Still, we shan't take any chances on being the occupant.

A speaker declares, "Townsend is a magician!" Oh, no, he isn't. A magician knows that before you can pull something out of a hat you have to put something in it.

Something you don't know may not worry you, but it worries those who have to listen to you explain it.

Some seem to think there is no limit to the amount of money this country is able to owe.

Russians say there is no hell. They can't see the woods for the trees.

Let he write it who can.—Closing sentence of an editorial. Seems to be an excellent idea.

The Chambered Nautilus.

(Of the many poems written by Oliver Wendell Holmes the elder, this is not merely the most enduring, but was also the favorite of its author. It is reprinted here because of its perfect applicability to the philosophy of the famous son of the famous father, who believed that "there is in all men a demand for the superlative.")

This is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
Sails the unshadowed main—
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings,
In gulfs enchanted, where the siren sings,
And coral reefs lie bare,

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl;
Wrecked is the ship of pearl!
And every chambered cell,
Where its dim dreaming life was wont to dwell,
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,
Before thee lies revealed—

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more.

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by thee,
Child of the wondering sea,
Cast from her lap, forlorn!
From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton blew from wreathed horn!
While on mine ear it rings,
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings:

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!

The Real Objective.

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: Echoes of the recent birth-control conference continue to float through the air, even in this city of continual conventions.

The Post at the time of the birth-control conference gave Mrs. Margaret Sanger, leader of the great movement, a splendid write-up, and also valuable news from the conference was reported, which was greatly appreciated.

Soon after this write-up of the conference a letter from a protester was published which definitely showed that mistaken understanding of the conference's efforts was predominant.

In the latest report of maternity deaths it is shown that the rate is unwarrantedly high and that the United States is among the leading five nations in the records of maternity deaths.

It is only reasonable that people at large should be instructed on the subject of generation, such information would naturally evolve into "planned economy."

The world is ready for readjustment. The great social question is how to improve our own generation and those to follow in a way that will insure happiness, contentment and comfort. E. T. S.

Inflation In Reverse.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many billions for direct and permanent relief are available which our statesmen have overlooked and can return automatically to the very folks who need them without setting up distributing agencies. Devaluation poured $2,000,000,000 of gold dollars into the gravy bowl to which the foreigner, the money and commodity speculator, has had unrestricted access for their 69-cent bonus for about two years.

Take the brake off the dollar by rebasing it on gold of the original weight and fineness; discard the fallacy of a managed 59-cent dollar which continues to give a bonus of 69 cents to the foreigner who tenders 59 cents of his depreciated currency in exchange for goods it costs Americans 100 cents to make.

Devaluation clipped $82,000,000,000 from the $200,000,000,000 of invested funds of this Nation which were saved in the centuries since this country was first settled. Relieve the distress which this clipping has caused every-day folks.

Do this by reversing the devaluation magic and letting the dollar soar as high as it can toward its original 100-cent value. Recover as much as possible of the spending money now being diverted to foreigners. We will have to do this eventually—why not at once?

Uncertain Still.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a recent paper you state that Robert Ingersoll was an atheist. He denied this, but said he was an agnostic.

I know this—just before he died he wrote a poem on this subject, but did not live to finish it.

A Sound Stand On Academic Freedom.

After a debate in which leading educators vigorously took opposing sides, the department of superintendents of the National Education Association wound up its Atlantic City meeting with a resolution declaring "unqualified belief in the principles of academic freedom for all workers in education."

The newly chosen national head of the department, Superintendent Stoddard, of Providence, explained that he personally wants schools to teach the facts about social problems, but that he is against permitting educators to foist their personal social opinions on pupils.

And Commissioner Studebaker, of the United States Education Department, argued for developing "a finer art of teaching" and for "freedom of the learner to learn, not the freedom of the professor to profess or to indoctrinate." He suggested that "we should seek deliberately to rid teaching of extreme forms of propaganda."

That debate among the superintendents was an excellent sign. It emphasized—especially since a commission of 11 members, after two years of study, was unable to agree about a stand on academic freedom—it emphasized that educators themselves differ and that the talk of them all being radical is jittery nonsense. . .

Those educators who insisted that capitalism is done and collectivism coming, and that therefore the schools must prepare youth for a new social order, may be right. Nobody knows. The fact that nobody knows is all the reason needed to discount their whole idea . . .

Those educators who on the contrary would center all teaching on things as they are, avoiding the slightest suggestion that there are weaknesses as well as strengths and that life is an evolution, are not educators at all. Their whole careers are bound to be confuted by inevitable change.

We need to remember that every past "established order" was considered divinely ordained and permanent, was believed by thinking men to rest on the realities of human nature. We need to remember that interests satisfied with the status quo usually want only the perfectness of that status quo ever to be suggested. The fact that some who feel this way talk mostly about not allowing propaganda for the new to overwhelm the schools merely camouflages the fact that what they really want is that the propaganda of the old shall be without competition . . .

As a people we do want, we must have, academic freedom. Commissioner Studebaker is right in setting up the ideal of a finer teaching art. That nothing is more difficult than to improve the art is obvious. But we do need in the teaching profession the same sort of thing that we seek in the judiciary—that the French seek in their judiciary by training a wholly separate class for it, distinct even from practicing lawyers. We need men and women who can, with increasing skill, lead young people to think and to maintain a reasonably open mind, while not confusing open-mindedness with easy and loose acceptance of whatever happens to be the shibboleth of change at the moment.

Getting all indoctrination out of any school system is as impossible as getting frailty out of human nature.

But it is certainly imperative to resist those who want the indoctrination to be all their way.

The Post Impressionist

Post Office, Thursday.

ONE of the editorial brethren recently perpetrated a profound piece about the kinds of fiction popular in times of depression. He said that, at such periods, we Americans prefer romantic adventure; but he intimated that in Italy, even during such an epoch as this, the popularity of Matilde Serao continues unabated.

The Post-Impressionist submits that, if the brother is correct about the Serao vogue, there certainly exists a deep difference between the reactions of American and Italian tastes to economic stress.

Imagine, if you can, any American finding relief from impending penury in Serao's story of "The Ballet Dancer." Or "On Guard!"

An industrious dancer in the last row of the ballet, this Carmela. She lives in wretched quarters—earns, but isn't always paid, nine lire a week—save for two or three friends from the theater, is a solitary.

These friends are women of easy morals, each supported by her special and jealous lover; but Carmela doesn't want to be "like that." Perhaps, passing him on the street, she thinks the Count di Torrefrande a splendid creature. But, even before he sneers at her, she remembers that he is the "friend" of a really illustrious coryphee.

However, Carmela is doomed.

Unlovely, stupid, engaged in a series of touching self-denials, illegitimate child of a humble mother and of a father about whom this daughter has neither the least knowledge nor the slightest curiosity, starving in the city where the proverb that "Man is a hunter" originated—her chances aren't great. And she misses them.

She yields to a cheap dandy whose sole desire in pursuing her is to be in the mode. She is apparently of an unsensuous temperament, but has scruples against accepting from him any gifts.

Going about with him, she occasionally encounters Torrefrande. He merely turns up his nose at her. She doesn't seem to mind it—much. When her first "protector" seeks fresh fields and pastures new, she (with the same indifference that had marked her first affair) accepts an elderly substitute.

Then she learns that Torrefrande has committed suicide.

She rushes to the tavern where his body lies. She falls upon him with cries that her affection for him had been her only real love:

"I have been faithful to thee, Cynara, in my fashion!"

On such an hilarious note does the story end.

Then there is "On Guard"—a rollicking history of prison life at Nisida in the Bay of Naples. Its hero is the illiterate Racco Traetta. He has been sentenced to a life term there for the trivial offense of murdering his father.

The scene in which Racco, on his arrival, goes to bed thinking escape easy, then hears the endless repetition of the sentinels' challenges and realizes that he must serve his sentence, is tremendously impressive, but not precisely lively. And for some pages thereafter the author conveys to her readers a full sense of jail-monotony.

It has again and again been demonstrated that few realists can write a novel without sentimentality. In "On Guard" the "Italian Zola" finds, for the motive of her story, the tenderness awakened in the parricide for the prison governor's little son, whose ingenuous questions and equally ingenuous affection go part way toward making Racco into something resembling a man.

But it wouldn't do to let the process of regeneration proceed too far. The author kills off the boy. So Racco joins with a number of his fellow convicts in a desperate attempt to break jail—and he's killed, too.

We are not belittling Matilde Serao's undeniable talents. To this day, her work must strike the American critic just as it struck a British critic nearly 35 years ago: It is "elaborate and ruthless." And it is only sometimes elaborate to the point of wordiness, ruthless to the point of the inartistic.

Though no details are spared, and though this is occasionally a trifle hard on even the hardened olfactory nerves of a contemporary reader, the impression endures that Serao is more conscientious than many of her school; her precision is always pre-Raphaelite, almost always justified. Though she has small pity on her characters, you are soon certain that they deserve little, and though she has less compassion on her readers, you quit her with the belief, however disquieting, that they deserve none.

So, if the Italians still admire Serao—well, they ought to.

Only, the Post-Impressionist thinks that if they read her to escape from being depressed by their present economic condition, they must——

But perhaps they want to keep clearly in mind the truth that, however badly off they are, they might be worse.

What's Happened To Disarmament Effort?

The Record of Three Years of Conference Is Viewed and the Results Found Wanting.

By Margaret Hardy,
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Geneva.

A MONTH ago the disarmament conference finished its third year of existence. It was, to be exact, the afternoon of February 2, 1932, that Mr. Arthur Henderson opened the conference in the Batiment Electoral at Genva. Some 500 delegates and experts, representing 60 countries, listened that afternoon to the long opening speech of the president. More than 300 journalists from all parts of the world pressed into the galleries. And when the presidential speech was over, the great hall of the press in the Batiment was full of the rattle of typewriters, the clicking of the telegraph, and the hum of animated discussion.

But now it is very, very calm at Geneva; the Batiment Electoral has been locked for a long time; in the press room at the league here and there a journalist idly turns the leaves of a document to learn that this sub-committee of that sub-commission of the conference has adjourned its meetings. If the conference is not dead, it has at least stopped breathing.

Why has this happened?

* * * *

SOME day, no doubt, an historian will write the official history of the conference in 30 or 50 thick and tedious volumes. The quantity of documents is staggering; the preparatory work alone, done by the commissions of the league, which produced the draft convention of December 8, 1930, took ten years. But this draft, which was the fruit of a laborious process of compromise, was, from the very beginning of the conference, drowned in a flood of new documents. For, when the conference began its work, the delegates of the different countries revived the old positions they had upheld in the preparatory commission and also brought forth new propositions and conventions.

The first task of the conference was inevitably one of clearing the ground for action. Therefore, the conference decided, once the speches were over, to suspend its plenry sessions and to divide its task between several commissions, of which the five most important were land, naval, air, national defense expenditure, and political. A general commission under the presidency of Mr. Henderson, on which all the states were represented, was to coordinate the work of the sections.

Out of these commissions sprang newones, new special commissions, subcommissions, committees, subcommittees, and drafting committees. Certainly the slowness of the conference was partly due to the drag of this heavy working mechanism. These commissions were appointed above all because agreement was not possible and the practice of forever appointing more commissions and of forever sending problems from one commission to another was a way out of one blind alley into aother. The first phase of the conference may be characterized by this continual process of referring difficult questions from one commission to another. But by the very shifting, the secondary aspects of the different questions from one commission to another. But by the very sifting the secondary aspects of the different questions eventually fell into the shadow, and what remained for the consideration of the conference was the fundamental question.

On February 25, 1932, the conference sent the draft convention and the proposals of the delegations to the general commission; the general commission divided up the work and assigned it to the five special technical commissions. But on their side the commission soon came to the conclusion that their work could not advance without the previous solution of certain questions of principle. The work was therefore returned to the general commission, which unanimously adopted one of those resolutions which Geneva produces when there is no real agreement.

The resolution was couched in formulas. The conference was to "take the first decisive step of general reduction to the lowest possible level" of armament; disarmament was to continue progressively "by means of successive revisions at appropriate intervals." On this much it was not difficult to agree, and the same was true for the statement that "armaments must be reduced to the lowest point consistent with national safety," and that "it will be necessary, further, to take account of the geographical situation and circumstances of each state."

Also the commission approved the principle of "qualitative disarmament, i. e., the selection of certain classes or descriptions of weapons, the possession or use of which should be absolutely prohibited to all states or internationalized by means of a general convention." These arms whose possession or use should be absolutely prohibited were those "whose character is the most specifically offensive or those most efficacious against national defense, or those most threatening to civilians."

All the disagreements reappeared as soon as the commissions attempted to give concrete application to the principles. The delegates of the armed powers understood that their respective countries had already reached "the lowest possible level" and for them it was a question of stabilizing the present armaments, leaving a few vague possibilities of reduction to the future. But the delegates of the countries disarmed by treaty (Germany, Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria) interpreted the "first decisive step" as an immediate substantial reduction of the arms of the other powers. In the same manner and even more acutely, deep divergences of opinion appeared when it came to determining which were the "arms whose character is the most specifically offensive." By what criteria was the offensive character of an arm to be determined?

The delegates of Germany and its allies insisted on the importance of a radical reduction of armaments and pointed out that if certain arms were to be permitted because of their defensive character, there was no reason why the defeated countries should not be allowed to have this type of arms. They, too, needed to secure themselves against attack. The others answered that defensive arms might be used for offensive purposes. Here arose the fundamental difficulty: the question of equality of treatment. All efforts to solve it proved futile, and on September 14, 1932, Germany left the conference declaring that she would not come back until the principle of equality of rights as between nations had been recognized. That was the first crisis of the conference.

THE history of the conference since June, 1932, is the history of the problem of equality of rights. The crisis into which the conference was thrown after the withdrawal of Germany has become a chronic difficulty which prevents all progress. Each time that there has been a chance of arriving at a solution of the problem of equality, the conference has taken a new lease on life, and each time that this hope has disappeared, the old lethargy has returned. It was not that there were no other important pressing questions; there were many. But the return of Germany was a prerequisite to any further action. A disarmament convention without Germany's adhesion was impossible.

Between September and December, 1932, there was a great effort made to bring about some agreement on the principle of Gleichberechtigung (equalization of rights) through diplomatic negotiations among the great powers. And this effort was not entirely without success, for at the beginning of December an accord was established on the general principle. On December 14 Germany returned to its pla in the general commission on the strength of a joint declaration made by Great Britain, France and Italy in which "equality of rights in a system which would provide security for all nations" was granted to "Germany and to the other powers disarmed by treaty."

* * * *

THE patient and flexible policy of Stresemann and Bruening had never been so close to attainment of its final aim as it was in December and January, 1932-1933, and never has the conference shown such great promise of success. Both sides were disposed to make concessions, and although no complete agreement was reached on the degree of Gleichberechtigung to be affected immediately, nor was the work still undone without difficulties, still there was a beginning of an understanding. But just at this point the "political" factor became acute and destroyed all that had been accomplished.

The year 1933, it will be remembered, opened in Germany under the sign of the swastika, the first Hitler cabinet taking office on the 30th of January. An atomosphere of uneasiness immediately began to spread over Europe. As late as March 16, MacDonald was still submitting to the general commission proposals very favorable to Germany. But even in England the policy of the prime minister began to meet with disapproval, and first of all from within his cabinet. In France, the rise of German nationalism evoked a violent reaction against Herrit's policy of recognition of equality for Germany.

At the same time in Germany there developed an opposition to the policy of compromise. Thus the breach between the two parties, which had been considerably reduced during the winter of 1932-33, became wider than ever. On October 14, 1933, when the Bureau of the Conference met, Sir John Simon announced that the MacDonald project would have to be revised in certain respects and in a way which proved to be unfavorable for Germany. Then the latent tension broke out into open rupture, and on that day Germany left the conference for the second time, this time leaving the league as well.

* * * *

TODAY it is still the problem of equality of treatment which is the center of the disarmament problem. For this reason the work of the conference necessarily came to a standstill after the withdrawal of Germany. The efforts made in the months that followed, to keep the conference in motion, were vain; the machine refused to turn over. Then the conference was adjourned to January, 1934, and since that date it has dragged on, one adjournment following another.

A serious effort was made to blow a little life into the conference last fall, when the final aim, the conclusion of a general convention, was temporarily set aside in order to reach an immediate agreement on particular issues, such as regulation and control of the manufacture and trade in arms, the institution of a permanent commission of of disarmament, and publicity of national defense expenditures. But these detail questions, however great their importance may be, can not put out of view the real final aim, the general convention, though for the present they constitute the entire activity of the conference.

That then is the stage at which the Conference for the Reduction and the Limitation of Armaments has arrived after a life of three years. It began to work, found itself confronted with the difficult essential problem of equality, was unable to solve the question, and, unable to close its work without Germany, it is awaiting her return.

But there has been one profound change in the last two years. In 1932, and up to the end of the year, the question for those who opposed recognition of Gleichberechtigung was whether to permit a partial carrying out of the principle by Germany. Today, in 1935, it is no longer a matter of admitting or permitting but of accepting a situation already created and legalizing it. The problem is to incorporate into a convention an almost complete equality which already has been virtually acquired in fact. Moreover, there is no longer a conference for the reduction of armaments, but only for limitation of existing arms.

Fletcher's Passing

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE recent death of the English novelist and maker of murder stories, J. S. Fletcher, removed one of the most popular of writers, and one for whom his readers really felt a personal affection. He was born in Halifax in 1863, was a clergyman's son, never attended a university, but received private instruction, was a newspaper man, writing editorials, news, special correspondence, practically everything except advertisements.

His first novel was published in 1892, and I believe his total number of books exceeded 100.

* * * *

But in addition to novels, he wrote a number of works that required immense labor and knowledge—for example, "A Picturesque History of Yorkshire," in three volumes.

Among the vast number of detective novels, the books by Fletcher were all marked by excellence of literary style, so that it was a pleasure to read them, apart from the plot. He was a distinguished man of letters; and there was a certain fineness of quality and unmistakable charm, that made his readers feel like intimate friends. I am sure many read the news of his death with a sense of personal loss.

Among his best-known stories are "The Harvest Moon," "Daniel Quayne," "The Root of All Evil," "The Charing Cross Mystery," "The Wild Cat," "Murder in the Squire's Pew," "The Stolen Budget."

In addition to other works, he published a volume of original verse in 1932.

Kemp to Take Post In State Chamber

Will Quit as Secretary of Charlottesville Group.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., March 6.—Vernon E. Kemp, who has been elected to the position of general secretary of the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce, will quit his post as executive secretary of the Charlottesville chamber March 15.

Serving as secretary in the State group, Mr. Kemp will be working as direct subordinate to Col. Leroy Hodges, director of the State chamber. The post he takes has not been filled during the past several years.

Mr. Kemp, who is a graduate of Washington and Lee University, came here to assume the executive secretaryship of the local chamber in June, 1929. Prior to this he had been alumni and executive secretary at Washington and Lee.

Carothers to Give Speech.

Hagerstown, Md., March 6 (AP).—Neil Carothers, director of the college of business administration of Lehigh University, was announced as the speaker for the annual chamber of Commerce banquet on April 5. Arrangements for the event are now being made.

John Brooks Wheeler Narrates Absorbing Career In "Memoirs of a Small-Town Surgeon."

By Theodore Hall.

OUT of all the varieties of professional shop-talk there may be, to which one can listen with the special delight known only to laymen—out of the chat of doctors and lawyers, the tales of explorers and soldiers, of crime reporters and deep-sea sailors—I above and away prefer the talk of doctors.

Their skill doesn't concern something remote, unchancy or highly avoidable—it comes as close as one's skin. Their heroism isn't displayed off at the other side of the world, in some panoply of high adventure—it has shown itself under the roof of any of us. Doctors can curl your hair tighter than the chap who saw the lynching, set you more sharply on your chair-edge than the man who had but one bullet for the charging elephant, rouse your blood more warmly than a bosun on a North Atlantic sea rescue, and tell you more about the race hopefully known as human than all the lawyers in Christendom.

But their shop-talk, I warn you, may be an acquired taste.

* * * *

JOHN BROOKS WHEELER, octogenarian surgeon, of Burlington, Vt., belongs to the last generation on earth which can recall the most spectacular chapter in medicine—the revolution which antisepsis has made in surgery. To say merely that it made the unclean into the clean will show no more than the total inadequacy of two adjectives. But it is another thing to realize that in 1874 no surgeon dared open the head, chest, abdominal cavity or the large joints, for fear of blood poisoning—and those parts must inclose 95 per cent of human ills. If you had to face a major amputation, you had but four or five chances in ten of surviving it. If you suffered a compound fracture (in which the broken bone pierces the skin), you had only one, two or three chances in twenty of living—and if you did live, it was at the price of an arm or leg. And now the mortality of amputations is but 5 or 10 per cent, and for compound fractures no more than 10 per cent, with amputations very seldom necessary.

If figures don't impress you, consider these scenes. In 1874 a surgeon made use of Lister's carbolic spray (1865) and washed his instruments in dilute carbolic acid, but those were his sole concessions to the merit of one of the three or four great discoveries of the world. For he wore no cap or mask, he did not care what his bare hands or his instruments touched while he was at work, and he operated—proud of the professional uniform—in an ordinary street suit whose front was stiff with accumulated blood and pus.

Nowadays all a lone germ can see in an operating chamber is a few pairs of eyes and an expanse of white coverings sterilized to the last degree. He stays outside, if he knows what's good for him.

* * * *

For in 1875 he entered the Harvard Medical School and grew up in the technique which thought a sponge could be washed by holding it under a tap, which dressed wounds with flaxseed poultice or "charpie and myrrh" (loose linen threads saturated with the mild astringent of tincture of myrrh) and which had just given up setting a dislocated hip by a block and tackle arrangement that stretched the patient out with a pull of three-quarters of a ton.

He studied anatomy under Oliver Wendell Holmes, who was so popular socially that the boys thought his lectures suffered. But not his wit—"a snap diagnosis," he said, "is a rapid method of arriving at a wrong conclusion." Dr Holmes would have enjoyed a remark made by one of the assistants—there had been a shortage of cadavers for the class, and the demonstrator reported in all innocence: "I assure you, gentlemen, I have left no stone unturned."

Later, the year "Pinafore" came to Boston, Dr. Wheeler became a "house-pup" (house pupil, or interne) at Massachusetts General. Here he saw the only case of hydrophobia in his career, duly and horrifyingly described—it was to be seven years before Pasteur could help that dread disease. European study under the great Nicoladoni at Vienna—the finest surgeon he ever knew—and Dr. Joseph Bell in Edinburgh (the famous prototype of Sherlock Holmes) prepared him for practice in his home town.

There, teaching at the University of Vermont, riding across upper New England in 23 below zero weather to bring a child into the world or save a diphtheria patient, and earning the respect and love of a whole countryside, he has stayed even since.

* * * *

"MEMOIRS OF A SMALL-TOWN SURGEON" is a book with two sides. One, the strictly surgical, presents case after case in detailed and absorbing narrative. If you want to know how operations are really done, Dr. Wheeler has respect enough for his reader to recite the processes plainly and straightforwardly.

But if all you get from such pages is a queasy feeling in the pit of your stomach, you can turn on to the store of homely, amusing, tragic and exciting anecdotes which stud a doctor's life—from the old lady who wanted him to wait until she finished her second pipe of tobacco before he began to operate to the time, at night, in a farmer's kitchen, when he had his scalpel inside the wound, his assistant dropped the oil lamp on the patient, and the patient began to come to, all at once.

And I liked the tale about one of his fellow doctors, a notably brawny man, who was driving his sleigh down a narrow country road when he met an Irishman in a sleigh coming toward him. "Turn out and let me get by," said the doctor. "Turn out yersilf!" cried the Irishman. Whereat the doctor climbed out, seized his opponent as if he had been a child, and tossed him neatly over the fence into a drift. Up got the Irishman, much impressed, and suddenly he began to laugh—"Plaze, sorr, would ye kindly be afther handin' me harse over to me?"

Reading Dr. Wheeler's book is as good as sitting down in his New England parlor to hear a grand old man recall the flow of a rich, unpretentious, and honorable life.

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

Not That Big!

THAT was unquestionably a masterful job Hugh Johnson did on Huey Long and Father Coughlin. But he weakened his case when he insisted Huey is dangerous, that is, dangerous to the country. He is right about Coughlin. For one thing, Coughlin isn't a clown, or at least doesn't act like one, and he speaks from the protection of the cloth. It was this same thing which made Bishop Canon such a nuisance for many years.

BARGERON.

Huey's danger is confined to the Democratic Party. He is doing the Democrats no good and the fact that he is doing them harm is because they let themselves in for it by not being the Democratic Party, but the demagogic party instead. Naturally it is hurtful when a man like Huey comes along and beats them at their own game. It has caused them already to turn and run back to see if they could find support on the respectable side. This, they are not likel to do in 1936 or for many years to come.

* * * *

This writer at one time thought Huey was suffering from a delusion of grandeur and shooting at the moon, that the end he sought was a movement of some kind, revolution or duly constricted ballot, which would put him in the White House. His actions and utterances gave weight to this belief notwithstanding it seemed impossible of accomplishment.

But recently it has become apparent that Huey's main ambition, at this time, at least, is to harass the Democrats. It's a long story as to why he and the Administration fell out. It begun, however, with the spectacle he created just outside the room at the Mayflower of the then President-elect Roosevelt when the latter was en route to Warm Springs late in 1932. This is the time Huey pretended to be drunk and with several drunken newspaper reporters around spoke of Mr. Roosevelt as though he were a dog. It was shortly after that he referred to Mr. Roosevelt, while talking to Jim Farley, in unprintable language.

When this incident was reported to Mr. Roosevelt he realized that not even his persuasiveness could do anything with Huey and it was decided then and there the sooner he was put out of the way the better it would be for all concerned.

Huey's conduct since has been designed to keep the Administration from getting him as much as anything else.

* * * *

That we all exaggerated the extent of Huey's delusion of grandeur is attested, I think, by an incident in his setto with Joe Robinson. The question came up as to whether he had armed bodyguards. He didn't see why he wasn't entitled to them, he said, because the President and Jim Farley had them.

"I am as big as Farley," he added.

Now this shows a realization of his limitations. Why did he limit the comparison to Jim? I've never heard of Jim having a bodyguard, but that's beside the point. The thing that is important in any appraisal of Huey is that he didn't say: "I am as big as Roosevelt and Farley."

A man would have to feel that big to have the ambitions imputed to Huey. His limiting of the comparison to Jim shows a humility we had not associated with him.

Frankly, I think it is far more humility than the Democrats in their talk of bowling over the Supreme Court, the power companies, the bankers, business in general, have shown. Manifestly with a lesser confidence in himself, a lesser delusion of grandeur, so to speak, Huey can't be seriously cherishing any hope of overthrowing them. Of course, they ought to go after him. They can't afford to let him continue to rave day after day. But the danger of Huey is not to the country; it is to them.

It is different with Father Coughlin. It is doubtful if he would stop with Jim Farley in comparing his bigness.

District Church Choir To Present Cantata

"The Conversion," a cantata by Harry Alexander Matthews, of Philadelphia, will be sung on Sunday at 8 p. m. by the choir of the Church of the Epiphany, under direction of Adolf Torovski.

Soloists will be Lillian Latham, soprano; Nancy Williamson, contralto; Ray Baine, tenor, and Ambrose Durkin, basso. The offertory anthem will be "Holy, Holy, Holy," by Humphrey J. Stewart.

Trophy to Be Given Capital Flier Tomorrow

The second annual award of the Washington Air Derby Association Trophy to the outstanding Washington aviator will be made at a banquet at the Columbia Country Club tomorrow at 8 p. m.

Name of the trophy winner will not be announced until presentation is made, Harrison Somerville, new president of the association, explained yesterday.

Speeding Popular Offense.

Speeding accounted for more than half the arrests made on the Mount Vernon Memorial highway last month. Out of a total of 34 cases, 18 were for fast driving, according to the February park police report made public yesterday. For the city proper, speeding was third on the list with 19 arrests. Forty-nine persons were charged with violating traffic regulations and 25 were booked for drunkenness.

Holmes' Life Lesson In Ideal Leadership

Symbol Of Courage; A Contrast With Reckless Would-Be Statesmen Of The Day.

By Elliott Thurston.

"We accept our destiny to work, to fight, to die for ideal aims. At the grave of a hero who has done these things we end not with sorrow at the inevitable loss, but with the contagion of his courage; and with a kind of desperate joy we go back to the fight."

Oliver Wendell Holmes penned these words many years ago, and they seem now especially felicitous in expressing what must be in the minds of all who, sorrowing at his passing, feel the contagion of his courage. The martial spirit, stirred by the Civil War in which he fought, lived always in him, found expression in much of his writing, but meant for him the battle for ideals and honor, a spiritual and never a material conquest.

The career of the statesmanlike jurist is especially tempting to the humdrum political observer today because it so well exemplifies what is so sorely needed in American life—indeed, in all the world. A nation which could breed a race of men like Holmes need have no fears for the future. It was not enough that he should have a "truly liberal vision of life." He not only had the liberal vision, but he had an insatiable thirst for all the little wisdom than mankind has learned upon this earth. More than that, he was not satisfied merely to search out the whole store of man's knowledge, but he must and did rationalize it and apply it as a working psilosophy for the present and a guide for the future. Still more, he was prepared to fight, in his case with the weapon of his pen, for the idealism he had wrought out of the wisdom he had gleaned.

EVEN more, he was vigilant to guard against mistaking what he thought he knew for the ultimate; his writings echo his unceasing skeptpticism toward himself as well as toward what other men said and thought and wrote. He remained always on guard against self-delusion. As his great friend, Felix Frankfurter, has written, "At the core of his decisions is the realization that words are only symbols of things and feelings and relations. He does not delude himself with phrases and saves us, if we have the wit to see, from verbal mirages."

Or as Harold J. Laski put it: "The talk of Mr. Justice Holmes is a thing that few of us who have ever heard it can forget. Nothing is taken for granted, and everything is acceptable save the pompous and rhetorical. It is swift, racy talk, never self-absorptive, always a little ironical, happy in the marshaling of ideas, rich in illusion. * * *

"If I may so phrase it, talk with him is a lesson in the art of thinking quantitatively. You learn why you put a particular value upon a man or book or idea and not a different value. And that vivid, restless mind plays around the whole scheme of discussion, eternally free, because eternally vigilant.

"Lord Haldane used to say that Mr. Justice Holmes was, with Morley and Gambetta, one of the three best talkers he had ever known. Here one must differentiate. Gambetta, by all accounts, was not a talker but a specialist in monologue; and Morley less drew you out than made your observations the basis upon which to build reflections of his own. The judge's talk is of a different kind. It is a cooperative examination of ideas, a hunt with you after an exciting quarry which lurks just over the horizon. There is never an assumption of superiority, never an unfair use of experience, always a willingness to accept the palpable hit. It is like a Platonic dialogue in which Plato allows honest play to the opponents of Socrates. It combines gayety with illumination, wit with gravity, the flashing phrase with careful precision. No platitudes pass muster . . . just because they are the commonplaces of tradition, and novelty is rarely eulogized just because it is the fashion of the hour."

AND again, "You see the soldier in him in his sense of the greatness of great action, even more, perhaps, in his sense of great thought as itself great action. Courage, whether it is that of Scott in those last moments in the wastes of the Antarctic, of the soldier on the battlefield, the physician in the typhus-stricken zone, commands his unstinted admiration."

And, "The supreme degree in which Mr. Justice Holmes has schooled himself to tolerance makes one humble in its presence. I have heard him seek to explain, even to defend, men who in hopes, or character, or ideals are utterly alien from his outlook. He is far less critical of the enthusiasm of others than he is of his own. He is more quick to accept a just criticism, more anxious to understand a view with which he does not sympathize than anyone I have ever known. He is impatient only with the bombastic, the rhetorical, and the pompous."

There is much more in Prof. Laski's appraisal that deserves to be quoted, but here is enough to bring out the contrast with so many of those alleged or acclaimed leaders of the hour whose voices ring out over the land by radio, from the rostrum, even from the pulpit, in mob appeal, free with bombast, with rhetoric, careless of what wisdom men have learned through the ages, reckless of the truth, intolerant, cocksure—and then the political observer thinks of Holmes—and, however, despairing, takes courage again.

Education and the Stock Market.

("The New York Stock Exchange is being urged by members of its governing board to establish better understanding with the public through a campaign of education and publicity."—News item.)

Lesson I.

O, see the ticker!
The ticker moves occasionally.
Why does the ticker move occasionally?
It may be nervousness.
What is a ticker?
Why?

Lesson II.

O, see the seat!
Where is the seat?
The seat is on the Stock Exchange.
There is a man in the seat.
What is the man doing?
The man is sleeping.
Why is the man sleeping in the seat on the Stock Exchange?
There is nothing else to do.

Lesson III

See the man and the chart!
What is the man doing with the chart?
He is reading it.
But he is holding the chart upside down, is he not?
Yes.
Why is the man holding the chart upside down?
It makes as much sense that way as any other way.
What does the chart show?
The chart shows a lot of curious lines and figures indicating where the stock market has been and when.
What difference does it make where the market has been and when?
It makes plenty of difference to the boys who make the charts.
Why do the boys make the charts?

Lesson IV.

O, see the man writing!
What is the man writing?
The man is writing a market letter.
What is a market letter?
A market letter is a combination fairy tale, pipe dream and autopsy.
What is its purpose?
Its purpose is to analyze the goings on in the stock market, mark where the body was found, show which way the long and short man went, and indicate what to expect next.
Who writes the market letters?

Lesson V.

This is George.
Why is the broker standing on his head?
Things look better to him that way.
Has he always stood on his head?
No; only since the S. E. C. took charge of things.
Does the broker know he is standing on his head?

Lesson VI.

O, see the man buying stocks!
Where?
Right over there.

Court of Appeals Backs Bank Plan

Reorganization Sustained in Annapolis Ruling.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—A reorganization plan, which eventually will make possible distribution of approximately $1,000,000 to depositors of the closed Title Guarantee & Trust Co., was sustained by the Court of Appeals here today.

The Appellate Court in its decision supported the action of Judge Eugene O'Dunne, of Baltimore, in dismissing the petition of a group of depositors objecting to the plan in lower court.

The effect of the decision was to clear the way for carrying out the reorganization plan which Judge O'Dunne approved in January. Under this plan the depositors will receive some $1,000,000.

Amity Club Officers To Be Inducted Tonight

Installation of its president, Barney Krucoff, will be held at the Shoreham Hotel by the Amity Club with a banquet and dance tonight.

Col. Edward Ostrow, a former president, will act as master of ceremonies. The floor show, a feature of the entertainment, will be supplemented by solos by Mrs. Nathan Wallack, Buddy Wilton Mendelsohn and Nathan Bachrach.

Other officers to be installed include Alvin Newmeyer, first vice president; Alfred M. Schwartz, second vice president; Dr. Morris Goldberg, secretary, and Julius Lully, sergeant at arms.

Kansas Primary May Pass.

Topeka, Kans., March 6 (AP).—Kansas, one of the early States to adopt the primary method of selecting candidates, faced the possibility tonight of a modification. The Senate passed, 24 to 8, and sent to the House a bill providing for the convention system of nominating minor State officers.

A cigarette-manufacturing city on the Bay of Kavalla, the rebel stronghold often has been battered by war. It was the bone of contention that launched the second Balkan war of 1912-13, which joined it to Greece, and British warships bombarded its forts when Bulgarians occupied them during the World War.

(Numerous Roman remains have been found in the neighborhood of Kavalla. It has been identified with the city of Neapolis, where St. Paul landed on his way from Samothrace to Philippi.)

Rebels Surrounded.

Unofficial reports said the plight of the rebels' land forces, surrounded by the troops of Gen. George Kondylis, war minister, on three sides and blocked by the Aegean Sea on the fourth, was bad.

Stragglers from the war zone said the insurgents' artillery consists only of a few mountain guns with a range of only 5 miles.

The residents of the region they have invaded are hostile, their supplies reduced by the government's warning that all aiding the revolt will lose their property, and their equipment is ill-designed to withstand the rigors of the wintry weather.

Further heartening the government was the continued flocking of reservists to its colors, and the public disavowal of their former chief by numbers of followers of former Premier Eleutherios Venizelos, the "old fox" of Greek politics whom the government has named as the "mad" leader of the uprising.

Reserves marched through the streets of Athens to the loud cheers of the populace.

Despite strict censorship, it was learned the area under rebel domination extended from the valley of the Struma River in east Macedonia into western Macedonia, 10 miles east of Alexandroupolis. The northern boundary extended roughly between Seres and Drama, while the Aegean was the southern boundary.

Blocking the rebels' escape to the north, in addition to the Greek forces, were the strengthened border guards of Bulgaria and Turkey, while Yugoslavia had promised Greece her cooperation in halting ingress or egress of rebels. France and England dispatched warships to protect their nationals.

Estimates of Deaths Placed at 300 to 400

By the United Press.

Belgrade, March 6.—Between 300 and 400 persons were killed throughout Greece in the first few days of revolution, of whom at least 30 were slain in Athens, the conductor of the Athens-Belgrade express said today.

The train official, who left Athens Saturday, said that some estimates of killed ran as high as a thousand, but he believed these were exaggerated reports.

Turkish Incident Feared by Bulgars

By the United Press.

Sofia, Bulgaria, March 6.—Bulgaria fears possibility of untoward acts by Turkish troops in connection with the Greek rebellion, it was learned tonight.

The supreme military council, consisting of King Boris, his cabinet, and the army general staff, conferred at the palace today as Greek rebels continued to enter the country over the guarded frontier.

The government is apprehensive lest Turkish troops provoke an incident on the Bulgarian frontier, or attempt to aid Greek government troops, or both.

Man Is Cleared In Dog Shooting

Judge Dismisses Cruelty Count Against Resident of Capitol Heights.

Judge Waldo Burnside, of the Hyattsville Police Court, yesterday failed to agree with Mrs. M. H. Jarvis, 140 Uhland terrace northeast, that Charles Knight should be prosecuted for shooting Rex, her daughter's 12-year-old police dog.

The charge of "cruelty to animals" against Knight, a resident of Capitol Heights, Md., was dismissed after he testified Rex was biting his pig when he wounded him in the leg.

His story, which was not refuted, was that he came upon the dog in the act of attacking his pig. He said that after firing he followed the wounded dog to its home but was not allowed to put Rex out of his misery. A policeman later killed the dog.

The case gained widespread attention last week when Mrs. Jarvis explained to newspaper men that the dog was a great favorite with her daughter, Laura, 13, and that the news was being withheld from her because the girl had a weak heart.

Group Organized By State Employes

400 Join Association to 'Protect Merit System.'

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, March 6.—Classified employes of the State of Maryland were formed today into an association with 400 members. Willis R. Jones, former assistant attorney general of the State, was elected temporary chairman of the group.

Mildred Medinger, former personnel examiner of the State employment commission, was made temporary secretary.

Mr. Jones said "an association of this kind can be a bulwark for the protection of the merit system which we have had since 1920. It will be nonpolitical, and every effort will be made to conduct it on a high plane."

Soviet Claims Private Trade Is Eliminated

Direct Exchange Without Money Remains Far From Achievement.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, March 6.—Private trade in the Soviet Union has been finally eliminated, with the exception of such minor forms as market vending and the like, it was officially announced today.

The Bolshevik ideal of direct exchange of products without the medium of money is yet far from achievement, it was admitted, but victory over private traders was regarded as an important step on the way.

Figures were made public showing that private trade in the U. S. S. R. during 1930 was 1,000,000,000 rubles (the ruble is nominally 50 cents), while in 1934 it was reduced to zero, with the exceptions mentioned.

The announcement was coupled with a statement that a 33-per-cent increase in the retail trade turnover was planned for 1935, bringing the total to 80,000,000,000 rubles, not including trade with collective farms. The 1930 turnover was only 20,000,000,000 rubles.

Still another important announcement was made to the effect that sale of goods on ration is to be reduced to 7 per cent of the total turnover. Such staples as sugar, potatoes and butter can still be purchased, but only in limited amounts in the workers' "closed" stores where especially fixed low prices prevail. These purchases can be supplemented in the "open" shops, where the general public buys.

Bullets Settle 'Affair of Honor' As French Deputies Fight Duel

One Combatant Wounded, But Foes Leave Field Unreconciled.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 6.—Two fiery Corsican deputies met on the "field of honor" today and one of them was carried off at the duel's end with a bullet through his pistol arm.

Cesar Campinchi and Horace de Carbuccia had fired at each other once in the Parc des Princess Stadium. They were about to fire again when Campinchi saw blood dripping from his extended arm.

The combat was stopped immediately. The principals, who had fought over an article referring to Campinchi published in De Carbuccia's weekly, left the field unreconciled.

Campinchi suffered a severed artery which was closed in a hospital where antitetanus serum also was administered. After several hours he was sent home. While his condition was not grave it remained serious and it was expected he would remain in bed for a week under observation.

After the midnight duel the police served notice on the seconds that the law had been violated. It was not indicated whether any action would be taken against the deputies, who might be able to take advantage of parliamentary immunity.

The article which caused the affair of honor attributed a jury verdict condemning a blind slayer to death to a plea for the defendant made by Campinchi as a lawyer. The article said the lawyer "made a mistake in not keeping still."

After the article appeared in the weekly Gringoire, Campinchi wrote an allegedly "offensive" letter to De Carbuccia, who issued the challenge.

Final Decree Signed, Aimee a Free Woman

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, March 6.—Aimee Semple McPherson, the evangelist, was a free woman today in the world of romance. David Hutton, portly barytone, was at the door when the courtroom opened, to present in person the formal decree of divorce for the judge to sign. Judge Dudley S. Valentine came in and signed it.

"Never again for me," Hutton said, explaining his haste in getting the final decree did not mean intention to find a new marital mate.

A 'Brain Trust' To Aid World Urged at Parley

An International Board of Experts Proposed at Dr. Butler's Conference.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 6.—A proposal to set up an international body of experts which would serve as a "brain trust" for all governments in advising ways to restore prosperity was formally presented at this evening's session of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's unofficial world economic conference.

It was understood the immediate reaction of the conference, including a score of leading British economists and bankers, was divided. No decision will be taken until tomorrow.

The aim of the international "brain trust" would be to carry on the work inaugurated by the present conference and to advise governments on practical methods for stabilizing currencies, lowering tariffs and other trade barriers, and even settling war debts.

Dr. Butler announced a formal statement of the conclusions of the conference, which is holding secret sessions, will be made public Friday afternoon. Political problems will be discussed tomorrow, with Sir Austen Chamberlain, chancellor of the British exchequer, presiding.

Long Life and Security

THE Metropolitan Life Insurance Company began publishing "Health Hints" for its policyholders in 1871 and ever since has carried on its efforts toward better health.

The Company cooperated with government officials in a campaign against a threatened cholera epidemic in 1892 and thus began its cooperative work with public health organizations.

In further developing its activities in the field of health, the Metropolitan organized its Welfare Division in 1909 and, at about the same time, a nation-wide nursing service was established for Industrial policyholders.

Subsequent health records demonstrate the value of these services.

During all these years the Company has worked shoulder to shoulder with national, state and local health organizations to stamp out preventable disease.

New low mortality figures were recorded in 1934 for practically all of the diseases against which public health forces have directed special preventive efforts—notably typhoid fever, tuberculosis, diphtheria, infant mortality and maternal mortality. During this year the good record of previous years continued to obtain among Metropolitan policyholders.

Cuban Leaders Move to Crush Growing Strike

By the Associated Press.

Havana, March 6.—An emergency meeting of Cuban political and army leaders tonight took decisive steps to crush strikes threatening President Carlos Mendieta's government, after an outburst of daylight terrorism took the life of one man and left 11 wounded in Havana.

Col. Fulgencio Batista, army commander in chief, in an almost unprecedented move ordered military commanders in each of the six provinces to name new customs and revenue chiefs to replace striking government employes, and announced the appointees would be permanent.

Asserting peaceful methods had failed to settle the spreading school strike, which today involved employes of three government departments, the 34-year-old former top sergeant said the moment had come "when we must use other means."

University Surrounded.

His determined statement, followed quickly by his energetic action in filling the vacant public offices, was taken to indicate the government's new determination to deal drastically, if need be, with the strikers.

Reinforcing that belief was the administration's action in moving soldiers and police up to surround Havana University, strike headquarters, and imprison 300 teachers and students, among them the directing committees of the strike.

The army commander's action stirred swift speculation as to what it portended for Cuba's political future. Heretofore the army has had nothing to do with the appointment of revenue chiefs, all such posts being filled by the secretary of the treasury.

Almost simultaneously with the explosion of three bombs in the customs house on the water front, wounding five, unknown persons in another part of the city machine-gunned an automobile carrying Ramon Vasconcelos, political writer, and several friends, killing one man and wounding three.

Among those injured at the customs house, where customs inspectors struck demanding the reinstatement of 39 discharged employes, was Capt. Oscar Hernandez, chief of Havana port police, and his assistant, Lieut. Carlos Perez.

Almost immediately word reached Havana that all public employes at Cienfuegos, on the south coast, had quit work at noon. Shortly afterward employes of the education, labor and treasury departments left their desks.

A bomb exploded inside the main treasury building at the moment the employes walked out, wounding one person.

The government employes went to swell the numbers of striking students and teachers, already estimated at more than 300,000, who have been out for several weeks demanding Mendieta's resignation.

There were reports that other government departments would join the walkout shortly, paralyzing the government's activities. Mendieta's administration already has been hampered by the resignation of six cabinet members in the face of the school strike.

Soldiers took over the treasury department this afternoon, holding some striking employes against their will to insure at least partial functioning of the department.

Adult School to Hear Publisher and Merchant

The final session of the Adult School of Religion at Mount Pleasant Congregational Church will begin at 7 p. m. today, when Frank R. Jelleff, president of Frank R. Jelleff Co., Inc., and Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Washington Post, will be the principal speakers.

Mr. Jelleff will speak on "Has Business a Responsibility for Economic Security?" while Mr. Meyer will use as his topic "The Newspaper's Contribution to Social Progress." The Rev. Russell J. Clinchy will lead a special study course and speak on "The Life and Teachings of Jesus."

Women on Relief List Failed to Seek Jobs

Richmond, Va., March 6 (AP).—The fact that many employable women now on Richmond's city and Federal relief lists never sought work through the city employment bureau was developed here today in the course of the installation of a new system under which all employable persons on relief lists must register with the bureau.

Of the first 100 employable women carried on the relief rolls sent for registration it was found 79 had never applied at the bureau for work. They said they did not know about it.

Virginia Preacher Shot In Quarrel; Man Held

Independence, Va., March 6 (AP).—J. H. Blevins, a preacher living at Whitetop, is in a hospital at Abingdon seriously wounded by a bullet in the abdomen, and W. F. Davis, of Whitetop, is in Grayson County Jail here charged with the shooting, which officers say occurred when the two men met on a road yesterday and quarreled. Blevins is expected to recover.

There were no witnesses to the shooting and cause of the quarrel has not been determined. Davis claims he shot in self-defense. Sheriff Lee Baldwin of Grayson County arrested Davis and brought him here.

Kiwanians Told Of Aid to Young

Meeting at Westminster, Hears Welfare Talk.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., March 6.—Underprivileged child work throughout Kiwanis International was the subject of an address by William Menges, of Hanover, Pa., before the local Kiwanis Club last night.

In observance of "Underprivileged Child Week," Mr. Frank T. Myers, president of the Carroll County Children's Aid Society, and Miss Bonnie M. Custenborder, social worker, of Westminster, also were present.

Mrs. Myers spoke on the need of laws for legalizing sterilization, and the efforts of the welfare organization in eradicating suffering and reducing poverty. Guests of the club last night were the Rev. Joseph Barnett and M. B. Sherman, of Towson, Md., and H. W. Hart, of Hanover, Pa.

Dollfuss' Death Shocked Rentelen

Caused Suicide Attempt, Is General's Testimony.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, March 6.—The shock of Chancellor Dollfuss' violent death drove Dr. Anton Rintelen, who was to have been Dollfuss' successor, to attempt suicide, an Austrian general testified today at the resumption of Rintelen's court-martial.

Gen. Anton Pohl, of the general staff, vividly described the effect of the news on Rintelen, former Austrian ambassador to Italy, during the hours when the fate of all Austria hung in the balance.

"But that's terrible," he quoted Rintelen as saying when informed Dollfuss had been shot. A few hours later, when police came to arrest him, Rintelen shot himself.

"When I rushed into the room with police at the sound of the shot Rintelen was sitting at a table, still conscious," Gen. Pohl testified. "On the table was a glass containing a grayish fluid."

The prosecutor pressed Rintelen for an admission that the glass contained poison, but the defendant retorted "it was nothing but water." Further inquiry revealed that nobody had bothered to analyze the contents of the glass at the time of the alleged suicide attempt.

Berlin Ponders Result of Action

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 6.—Bewilderment was evident in high German quarters tonight as efforts were made to gauge the possible consequences of Adolf Hitler's postponement of Sir John Simon's scheduled visit to Berlin.

With high officials admitting Hitler canceled the conference with the British foreign secretary because he felt the recent British white paper, criticizing German rearmament, indicated Germany would not be treated as an equal in security negotiations, resumption of the peace talks in the near future seemed unlikely.

The propaganda ministry insisted Simon's invitation would be renewed as soon as Hitler's cold and throat trouble, the official excuse for the postponement, clears up.

The lightning-like speed with which Der Fuehrer moved in calling off the meeting and the fact that no allusion was made to any future meeting caused unofficial Germany to speculate as to what lay behind the act.

Opinion privately expressed was that the general uneasiness caused by war scares sweeping Europe was intensified by the British white paper.

16 Oyster Packers Face NRA Hearing

Code Violation Charged to Virginia Concerns.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 6.—Charged with violating the NRA code governing their industry, 16 Virginia oyster packers have been directed to appear before the regional compliance council in Washington tomorrow, J. J. Skorup, jr., who will represent the Richmond NRA office at the hearing, said today.

S. K. Heard, field adjuster attached to the Richmond NRA office, charges an investigation made by him showed that oyster shuckers have not received the code wage of 25 cents a gallon for their labor. The packers face revocation of their Blue Eagles and possible prosecution by the Department of Justice if the charges are proved true.

The 16 concerns cited by L. J. Martin, acting regional director, include M. L. Marshall, Rushmere; J. R. Watkins, Smithfield; F. M. Headley & Son, Tidewater; T. C. Slaughter, Morattico; E. W. Long & Co., Irvington; A. J. Lewis, Walnut Point; A. B. Garner, Lewisetta; Winstead & Wilson, W. A. Dameron & Bros. and Oscar Ashburn & Son, Weems; R. E. Dobyns, Monaskon; Morattico Packing Co., Morattico; George R. Smith & Bros. and Rice Oyster Co., Sharps; Fred W. Grundy, Covington, and Bertrand Packing Co., Semora.

Reich Officers Laud Men Slain As Traitors in Hitler's 'Purge'

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 6.—Two famous men who were slain in Adolf Hitler's 1934 "blood purge" and who were denounced by the Reichsfuehrer himself as "traitors," have been signally honored and in effect indorsed by 470 German army officers, it became known today.

Before the Reichstag last July 13 Hitler denounced the two men—Gen. Kurt von Schleicher, former chancellor, and Gen. Ferdinand von Bredow. Von Schleicher's right-hand man—as "traitors," so listing them along with 70-odd others who met death in the Nazi housecleaning of June 30.

A week ago the army men, officers of the old imperial army and of the new Reichswehr, met to celebrate the 102d anniversary of the birth of the German strategist, Field Marshal Alfred von Schlieffen, and paid solemn tribute to the memory of the two slain men.

A carefully worded statement prepared by the 85-year-old Field Marshal August von Mackensen, with the knowledge of the Reichswehr ministry, which the officers tacitly approved, said in effect that "the personal honor of both men was in no wise affected" by their opposition to the Nazi regime.

Missourian Shows 'Em; Steals House, Is Jailed

By the Associated Press.

Poplar Bluff, Mo., March 6.—Elmer Smith is in jail for stealing a house.

Prosecuting Attorney Ted M. Henson accused Smith of skidding a small house down the bank of Black River to a raft and floating it downstream a couple of miles. He then moved the building to dry ground, made necessary repairs and moved in.

Corsica Sentences Bandit King to Die

Robin Hood Defense Fails; Spada Appeals.

By the Associated Press.

Bastia Corsica, March 6.—Andre Spada, tough bandit king of the Corsican brush, today was sentenced to die on the guillotine for murders committed during his reign of terror.

Despite efforts of the defense to paint the outlaw as a twentieth century "Robin Hood" who only followed the tradition of the island, the jury took only a few minutes to find him guilty.

Spada's conviction was for the slaying of a young girl he allegedly mistook for one who had spurned his affections. He was accused of five other murders.

The conviction was the bandit's fourth, and it was the fourth time he had been sentenced to death. It was the first time, however, he had been present at his trial.

Counsel for the bandit king, who claimed world-wide attention in 1931 when France sent an army of 2,000 men after him, announced an appeal was being filed, staving off his execution for at least two months.

Boulder Dam Quiz Attacked by Kaiser

Pay Roll Probe Reflection on Officials, He Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, March 6.—Spirited denial that Six Companies, Inc., builders of Boulder Dam, has kept certain pay rolls secretly was made today by Henry J. Kaiser, chairman of the construction organization's executive committee, in a telegram to Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes.

The Government's recent action in impounding the company's pay rolls for investigation of allegedly long work hours was called by Kaiser a reflection upon hundreds of officials and engineers of Ickes' own department, who are charged with supervision of the dam construction.

Kaiser said Ickes acted upon information obtained from a discharged employe. He said it was "inconceivable" the 300 men employed by Ickes to represent him on the project would "fail to have knowledge of those employes who have worked overtime."

P.-T. A. Picks Delegates To Education Hearing

Mrs. William H. Reynolds and Mrs. Ronald McDonald have been appointed to represent the Parent-Teacher Association of the Woodside School at the State Legislature in Annapolis March 12, when a hearing will be held on appropriations for the educational program of the State.

This action has been taken in conjunction with other Parent-Teacher Associations in Maryland who have been asked to send representatives to the hearing in support of the school program.

The association also will send representatives to a training class for Girl Scout leaders, which will be organized today in the Woodside Methodist Episcopal Church. A dinner will be held March 19 at the school by the cafeteria committee.

Annapolis Opens Bids on Sewerage

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—The Virginia Engineering Co., of Newport News, submitted the lowest of two bids for the construction of a sewage treatment plant for the Annapolis metropolitan sewage commission. The bid was $82,615. The other estimate was from Ligon & Ligon, of Baltimore, $102,775.

Bids were opened by Engineer Robert L. Burwel. Award of contract was deferred pending approval by the PWA. The sewage commission will meet Friday to discuss the bids. Nor has any action been taken on bids recently submitted for a water supply station.

The sewage plant is part of an $800,000 project to take care of Annapolis and surrounding territory, including the Naval Academy.

Recital Given By Zimbalist At Embassy

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

There is no embassy in town more admirably suited for entertaining than the Russian Ebbassy on Sixteenth street, which was opened last year after it had been vacant for some 16 years.

Last evening the great marble staircase, red carpeted, and the wide halls and drawing rooms were ablaze with lights from the beautiful crystal chandeliers, as more than 200 guests arrived to attend the recital given by the well-known violinist, Mr. Efrem Zimbalist. A small dinner preceded the recital, after which the guests adjourned to the large drawing room, where the artist gave a program which included "Romance in G Major," by Beethoven; "Spinning Song," by Papper-Auer; "Le Coucou," by Arensky, arranged by Zimbalist; "Improvisation On a Japanese Tune," by Zimbalist, and a fantasy on Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Le Coq d'Or," also arranged by Zimbalist. Mr. Theodore Faidenberg accompanied Mr. Zimbalist at the piano.

Later in the evening a buffet was served in the dining room where the guests gathered.

Czechoslovakia Legation Gives Gay Reception

Affair Held in Honor of President Masaryk's 85th Birthday.

Yesterday afternoon the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Veverka entertained at a large reception in the legation on Massachusetts avenue in celebration of the eighty-fifth birthday of the president of the Czechoslovakian republic, Mr. Thomas G. Masaryk.

Mme. Veverka has recently returned from Europe, where she and her daughter, Miss Nella Veverka, spent several months in Prague, and yesterday was the first occasion for her friends to welcome her return. With the Minister, Mme. Veverka received the guests at the head of the wide staircase. She wore a gown of black velvet fashioned with a long skirt and long fitted sleeves. The square neckline was trimmed with a collar of handsome lace.

Mrs. King Assists.

Guests gathered in groups in the large drawing room and library and in the dining room, where a long tea table was spread. Roses in tall silver vases, and candles in silver candelabra decorated the table where Mme. Broz, wife of the Secretary of the Legation, wearing a gown of black velvet, with a turban to match, presided at one end, while Mrs. William H. King, wife of Senator King, also in black, was at the other end.

Among those present were the Ambassador of Great Britain, Sir Ronald Lindsay; the Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. Michael MacWhite, the Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik, the Minister of Portugal and Mme. de Bianchi, the latter wearing a shoulder cape of sable.

Swedish Envoy Attends.

Also seen were the Minister of Sweden and Mme. Bostrom, Senator Arthur Capper, the Solicitor General and Mrs. J. Crawford Biggs, Mrs. Bartow S. Weeks, of New York, who is spending several weeks at the Mayflower; Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Britten, Mrs. Stanley F. Reed, Mrs. Chester A. Snow, Mrs. Frederic D. McKenney, and her daughter, Mrs. McKenney Mallan; Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, Mrs. Sol Bloom and Mme. Sokolowska, wife of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy.

The Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Don Guillermo Patterson, was there, with his two charming daughters, Senorita Olga Patterson and Senorita Zoe Patterson, and the Counselor of the Swedish Legation and Baronees Beck-Friis.

Ball to Revive Gay Festival Of Old Russia

Bal Masque at Shoreham Saturday Will Be a Brilliant Event.

Brilliant costumes and decorations will mark the celebration of the old Russian feast day, "Maslenitza, at the Shoreham Hotel Saturday, when this gayest festival of the old Gregorian calendar will be revived with all its colorful pageantry by the "White Russians" of Washington.

Official Lent began yesterday, but Russian Lent starts on Sunday following the celebration of "the last day of forgiveness," before the season of penitence.

Alexander Taranin and his corps of artists have painted huge panels depicting scenes from old Russian fairy tales and folk lore, which will be set up in the ballroom as a background for the carnival. When guests arrive they will be greeted by a large dragon, one of the fabled monsters of Russian folk lore, and from then on they will dance and live in a mythical setting.

Many Features Planned.

Ladies in court costumes, dashing officers in the costumes of the famous Hussars, the Czar's imperial guard, green shirts, red breeches and black boots; members of the debutante committee in Russian peasant costumes, characters from old fairy tales, and picturesque Cossacks will pass in review before the judges.

There will be many entertainment features, among them two gypsy fortune tellers who will reveal the future to guests; wild peasant dances, gypsy ballads and special dances by Lisa Gardiner and a group of her dancers. After the supper, which is in charge of Mrs. Charles Moser and her assistants, costumes will be judged and prizes awarded.

Carnival to Benefit Church.

One of the unique features of the carnival will be the myriads of tiny bells suspended from the ceiling of the ballroom which will tinkle with the movement of the dancers. This is to symbolize the sleigh bells of the old celebration of the festival in Russia, the drive of the merry-makers home through the moonlight at dawn.

Boris Timchenk, chairman of the committee, announces that all proceeds from the ball will go to the St. Nicholas Russian Orthodox Church of this city.

Makeup Set Assures Blend Day or Night

By I. Anne Davis.

THERE ARE SOME who maintain that American women are amateurs at make-up. Only recently an outstanding young bachelor who was interviewed on the subject declared that women in this country were prone to streak their lips, whitewash their faces, and paint two vivid spots on their cheeks.

It seems to us that this young man was grossly exaggerating; that if any make-up deficiencies were laid at the door of American women they would center almost completely around the shades of make-up used.

Don't you agree that a vast majority of women are careless about selecting one shade of rouge for daytime and another for evening? That all too many are not painstaking to use a rouge and lipstick that blend? And that powders are not chosen to offer a flattering background?

Whereas there are numerous make-up groups which deserve commendation, there is one in particular which should find favor with every woman who wants to appear distinctive and well groomed.

The well-known cosmetician who created it studied colors and color harmony for a long time before she felt she had perfected the one rich tone which would adapt itself to every type, every age, every personality—and every occasion. As a result we have her foundation lotion, powder, rouge and lipstick, all in this beautifully blended russet tone.

It is a make-up which you may feel free to wear at any time, and with the assurance that your coloring will be neither glaring under a noon day sun nor faded in the subdued lights of evening.

Whether you travel by plane or train, or whether you wind your ways down the highways in your Ford or Rolls Royce, you'll be bound to want your luggage carrier as light as it can be.

Light Luggage Bags.

If you want it not only light, but roomy, too, you should inspect the display in a downtown store. Here you'll find a luggage bag that's not merely light—but the lightest in the world!

It's made of a crash colored linen with a Pyrovalin finish or else of a featherweight imitation leather. Take your choice.

You can lift it with your little finger, but what is even more phenomenal, you can carry 40 to 50 pounds in it.

It's almost impossible to believe that a luggage bag with so many utilitarian qualities could also be rated high in appearance. But this is so. The linen bags are given a final dash of chic with a bright colored stripe down the center. The leather cases are beautifully finished with sheeny moire linings. And both types fastern securely with zippers.

Kit for Quick Facial.

Here's something that travelers, business women and homebodies will all welcome. It's a beauty kit which contains all the essentials for a quick but thorough facial.

There's a beauty cream for cleansing purposes, a tissue cream to soften your skin and nourish it, a skin tonic which is both a refreshener and an astringent, a protective cream which prevents chapping and windburn and acts as a powder base, too, a box of exceptionally fine powder and an exquisitely dainty hand lotion.

Can you imagine buying all these things for only $1? And yet you can today, tomorrow and Saturday.

Masterpieces in Crystal.

Many famous perfumes are known not alone for their haunting, exciting scent, but also for their bottles, many of them masterpieces in crystal.

Unfortunately, though, some budget limitations forbid the purchase of the large, exquisite bottles with their alluring contents. It was with this thought in mind than an ingenious manufacturer has put out miniatures of these, which we may buy for 50 cents.

You can well imagine what a thrill it is to purchase a dram of your favorite perfume and have it put in a midget bottle, small-sized twin to the genuine one.

"Optimistic Lady" Told That Even Scholars Are Only Human.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Tell "Optimistic Lady," whose letter you answered Tuesday, to proceed with caution in her search for fellow scholars. Kindred spirits of that type find each other out in good time but it is a slow process and she should be glad she started in time. I have spent a good many painful years learning to be normally sociable.

• • • •

Another thing she will discover is that scholars in their moments of relaxation play tennis and dance like anyone else and enjoy bridge and even "idiot's delight." I know very intelligent students of English literature whose favorite adjectives are "swell," "lousy" and "grand." Tell "Optimistic Lady" to be not deceived nor yet dismayed, and to heed your advice about keeping those blue stockings tucked away in a corner of her bureau drawer.

• • • •

I studied for a year in the graduate school of one of our "large Eastern universities," and a fellow student of the masculine gender once confessed to me that all lady graduate students are suspect: the immediate assumption on the part of men being that a woman entering the field of scholarship is good for nothing else! Sincerely,

SYMPATHIZER.

Astute Commentary.

DEAR SYMPATHIZER: You have herewith told "Optimistic Lady" all you had to say so concisely and so convincingly there seems nothing for me to add. I suggest she take special notice of the second paragraph, in which you most discerningly reveal the scholar to be a very human being after all, in his moments of relaxation.

Prize Posters Are Exhibited

THE 14 PRIZE winning posters in the annual national poster contest conducted by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs last November are being exhibited this week at Woodward & Lothrop's. This display is sponsored by the District of Columbia branch of the organization, as a preliminary to National Business Women's Week, March 17 to 23, and is under the direction of Miss Florence Enos.

The posters previously shown in Detroit, Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Columbia, Mo., Vicksburg, Miss., and Richmond, Va., will be sent next to New York for a 10-day exhibition.

The fine arts review section of the District of Columbia League of American Pen Women, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Charles Leonard Chambers, will make a tour at 2 o'clock Saturday through the New National Museum.

Members and their guests will meet just inside the main entrance on Constitution avenue.

The group will study the sculptures in the Ward bronze room and the adjacent collection of precious gems.

The Writers' League will meet at 8 o'clock tonight at the Thomson Community Center. The program includes verse by Miss Dolores Oeston, Miss Anna Priestly and Charles Cottingham; short stories by Mrs. Ione Lee Mooney, Mrs. L. W. Tilton and Miss Gladys Smith. An article will be given by Miss Julia Escher.

Miss Janet Richards will give her annual lecture for the benefit of the Work for Poor Churches at 4:30 o'clock today at the Mayflower Hotel.

Miss Richards will present a review of the puzzles and perplexities of present political problems, both home and foreign.

Columbia Chapter, Delphian Society, will meet at 10 o'clock today at Woodward & Lothrop's. The subject will be "The Development and Beginnings of Music." Mrs. W. W. Spaid will be the leader and will open the discussion by giving a talk on "A General Survey of the Development of Music."

Iota Phi Delta Chapter of the Delphian Society will meet at 10:30 o'clock today at the Shoreham Hotel. Mrs. Alexander Wylie will lead the program. "The Athens of Pericles" will be the subject.

600 Pounds of Steel A Day Used in Home

New York, March 4 (AP).—An average of 600 pounds of steel a day, from hairpins to kitchen stoves, is used by the American houswife in her home, said estimates today by the American Iron & Steel Institute.

The institute estimated that the total weight of the iron and steel now in service in house furnishings was 15,000,000,000 pounds.

From breakfast to bedtime the housewife handles steel—the steel frying pan sometimes starts off her day and she usually ends it by winding a steel alarm clock, the institute said.

Repeal of Marriage Clause for Capital Teachers Revives the Old Controversy Over Efficiency

Judging from the careers of these women, marital status has no effect on teaching ability. Emma Hart Willard (left) was successful both as a wife and mother and as an educator. Mary Lyon—equally successful—abandoned the idea of marriage in favor of her profession.

Spinsterhood, Teaching Were Hand in Hand a Decade Ago.

The recent repeal of the "marriage clause," as applied to Washington teachers, has revived the controversy over married versus spinster school teachers. Which is the more efficient? Will married teachers survive the back-to-the home movement? This is the first of three articles on the subject.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

TWENTY years ago a girl could take her choice. She could marry, settle down to keeping house and rearing "a quiver full" of children, or she could teach school. Spinsterhood and pedagogy became one. The title "school teacher" came to be inevitably preceded by "old maid," and a married woman who applied for a school was as out of place as the militant feminist who took the stump for woman's suffrage.

Yet, even then, there were married women—few, of course, compared to the number of spinsters—who were winning laurels as teachers. From then until after the World War, women in increasing numbers went out of the home into the schoolroom. By 1920 there was a noticeable sprinkling of married women in almost every educational system. Eventually, however, the back-to-the-home movement, born of the depression and sweeping over Europe, began to make itself felt in this country. World-wide unemployment and personnel reductions resulted in unfavorable policies toward married women even in the United States, where working wives were already firmly established in the field of pedagogy.

Did this signify single women were more satisfactory in the schoolroom than married ones? Did it imply no woman could manage a home and a full-time teaching job and make success of each?

Noted Teachers of Past.

Many persons, prone to answer both these questions in the affirmative, pointed with pride to the careers of noted teachers of the past, most of whom were single women. E. W. Lawes in his book, "The Spinster's Profession," discussed at length the work of Hypatia of Alexandria, probably the most eminent woman teacher of antiquity. "Her great eloquence, coupled with her intellectual gifts, attracted to her classroom a large number of pupils," Mr. Lawes wrote. "Among these was Synesius, afterward the famous bishop of Ptolemais. If Hypatia had been married, could she have devoted enough time to teaching to win distinction and immortality as the most distinguished teacher of her time?"

Mr. Lawes also discussed the work of another spinster, Mary Lyon, who has often been referred to as "the first great pioneer of female education in the United States." It would seem, in proving his theory that teaching has always been an "old maid's profession," Mr. Lawes was wise in discussing the accomplishments of Mary Lyon. Born in a period when it was accepted that woman's sphere was the home, this remarkable woman underwent numerous hardships to obtain an education. She is remembered today, however, chiefly because she founded the Mount Holyoke Female Seminary on the original plan of combining domestic labor and intellectual pursuits.

She presided over that school with great success, devoting every minute of her time to its advancement until her death in 1849. Her work as a pioneer in education for women paved the way for efforts, later, of Catherine Beecher, another single woman who pioneered for higher education.

Built Great School.

Dorothea Beale, an English schoolmistress, was another who relinquished marriage in favor of pedagogy. She accepted the prinicpalship of the Ladies College in Cheltenham and steadily built it into one of the great schools of the country.

No discussion of noted teachers of the past is complete without mention of Elizabeth Palmer Peabody, a spinster, through whose efforts the first public kindergarten in the United States was established in Boston in 1870.

A study of any history of education in this country will reveal the names of many spinsters who were famous teachers. Were there, also, married women who distinguished themselves as educators in the early days?

There were. The list is not long, but it is necessary to mention only two names to prove that even in the past there were competent married women teachers.

In England there was Susanna Wesley, a devoted wife and mother who was also a noted instructor. The youngest daughter of Dr. Annesley, a prominent dissenting minister, Susanna early began a study of Greek, Lation, French, logic and metaphysics. Married at the age of 20, her life from then on was a constant struggle with poverty. The task of educating her children was left entirely to her, and six hours a day for 20 years she continued this work.

Son Followed Teachings.

Her famous son, John Wesley, followed her teachings throughout his life. He later wrote of her, "Her will was my law all the days of my youth. Her letters in my college days were my oracles, and her life has always been my most blessed example."

Here, then, was one married woman who managed a home, bore 19 children, reared 10, and was still a successful teacher.

Emma Hart Willard, another wife and mother, is one of the most prominent figures in the history of higher education for women in the United States.

Six years after she began her career as a teacher she married Dr. John Willard and later founded the Troy Female Seminary, which served as Vassar College for half a century before the establishment of the institution at Poughkeepsie. Teaching in, and directing, this school for 17 years she eventually turned over her administrative duties to her son. Not only an advocate of advancement but a practical worker for it, Mrs. Willard brought to her task great earnestness of purpose, a genius for teaching, and boundless executive capacity.

There are other women, both married and unmarried, who have achieved fame as teachers in the past. Have more recent standards changed the situation? In the light of modern education, has teaching become such an absorbing job, married women should be forced out of the profession in favor of women who have no duties as homemakers?

What TODAY Means

"PISCES"

IF March 7 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:15 a. m. until noon, from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 7:15 to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:15 to 10:15 a. m., from 4:15 to 6:15 p. m. and from 9:15 to 11:15 p. m.

You will be wise to avoid intentionally disappointing anyone on this date. Should you make a mistake, it may be the best policy to admit it. Do not be afraid of facing any issue which may arise, for by displaying a lack of fear you should be able to handle it successfully. Remember the pen can be a very dangerous instrument, if handled carelessly, so be careful what you write. Temperamentality is just a polite term for temper, and anyone who indulges in being temperamental on this date probably will have good cause to deeply regret it. The truthfulness of a friend may hurt, but if you know it is the truth be honest with yourself and accept it with good grace.

If a woman, and March 7 is your birthday, you can make this new year in your life one of the happiest you have lived, if you will make up your mind to do just exactly what you know is right, and not give a rap about what the reaction of others will be.

If you have confidence in yourself you can make wonderful progress, so have it. Educational work, trained nursing, stenography, as well as acting as saleswoman, are lines of activity in which you should do well. You should be very fortunate in matters of a domestic nature, or involving love.

If a man, and March 7 is your natal day, the opportunity probably will sooner or later come, through which your ability will gain recognition. Scientific research work, teaching, theology, architecture, horticulture, and printing, offer plenty of activity for one of your ability.

How To KEEP WELL

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Bronchial Asthma in Children.

THE best way in which protein can be used by the body is through the digestive tract. We take protein and other foods with our meals and the process of digestion splits the protein substances into smaller parts. The body then assembles these parts into its (the body's) own protein. Beef protein differs from human protein and yet we use beef as food; we digest it and remake protein—yours and mine—from the digested fractions that originally were beef.

Usually the body suffers no ill effects from this process, but should we attempt to inject beef protein under the skin we might bring on a severe reaction—difficult breathing and collapse—a situation sometimes called an allergic reaction.

The term "allergy" indicates an exaggerated or unusual susceptibility to a substance which is harmless to most people.

Through a study of these protein reactions many disease conditions have been partly explained and a method of relief devised. One of these is known as bronchial asthma.

In most cases there is a noticeable bronchial element either complicating or associated with the typical asthma attacks. As a rule, however, the acute attack comes on suddenly. The onset is characterized by wheezing and difficult breathing that gradually becomes worse, obliging the patient to sit up in bed with the head thrown back, the mouth open, and the facial expression one of anxiety.

Breathing is very noisy and difficulty is encountered in gettting the air out of the lungs. There is usually no fever. The attack may pass away in a few hours, sometimes in less than one hour. It may be repeated daily or, again, it may not return for weeks or months. During the period of freedom from attacks there may be no symptoms other than a mild bronchitis, of which the child may not complain and which may scarcely be noticed by the parents.

An attempt should be made to determine the peculiar offending substance which causes the condition. Sometimes removal to a different climate or from one house to another is all that is necessary.

Every child who is susceptible to asthmatic attacks, or who has had an occasional severe bronchitis, particularly those whose parents show evidences of asthma, hay fever or chronic skin disease, should be tested for offending proteins. Even before skin tests are made it is entirely feasible to keep a food diary, and in this way, by omitting one particular food at a time, determine the harmful substance.

Designers Seek To Please Queen On Court Gowns

By the Associated Press.

LONDON.—London's dress designers practically are living on the royal doorstep at Buckingham Palace these days, anxiously awaiting the latest word from Queen Mary and, so to speak, doing penance for their sins of last spring.

Practically all of them had a hand at that time in incurring the royal displeasure, and they are spending most of their waking hours trying to make sure it doesn't happen again.

Last year's indiscretion had to do with the gowns worn by the presentees at the royal courts. When it became known at that time that the queen had decreed high necklines in front, the designers blithely substituted very low backlines.

The result was a procession of beautiful, but almost backless, gowns. The queen said nothing at the time, but has since expressed the wish that those attending the three courts this spring will choose a more pleasing decolletage. Her simple wishes are not lightly disregarded.

Palace officials have passed the word around that court dress is more or less a uniform and should not break away too far from conventional lines. In Other words, there is to be no more "shooting the works" when the girls come from America to meet the king and queen.

Pastel blue, it is predicted, will be the most fashionable color for this year's courts, with pastel pink running a close second.

Honey Pleasing To the Palate; Aids Health

By Dorothea Duncan.

IF YOUR SWEET tooth is demanding something just a bit different, treat it to honey, in one form or another, and see if it won't be pleasantly satisfied. Honey is a natural sweet and just as healthful as it is delicious.

The next time you plan to serve biscuits, don't forget that honey is a perfect accompaniment. Be sure the biscuits emerge from the oven, light, flaky and golden brown, just at the moment when the hungry family is waiting for them. Serve them piping hot with plenty of butter and honey. You won't need any dessert for this meal if you have plenty of biscuits. Griddle cakes and waffles are equally as popular when served with the same combination of honey and butter. Try it some morning for breakfast.

Honey can be used in many ways as a substitute for sugar. This idea is worth little now, but it will be important during berry season. Trickle a bit of honey over fresh red raspberries or blackberries and see how you like it in place of sugar. The honey seems to be absorbed by the berries and imparts to the fruit a delicious sweetness. This should prove a solution to the problem of some who find berries too sour, and yet the addition of sugar is also displeasing because the fruit then tastes gritty.

Puddings often call for a different sauce and here honey is again prominent. Try one of the two honey sauces that follow to serve with your next cottage pudding.

1 egg
½ cup of honey
1 cup hot water
1½ tablespoons butter
½ lemon, juice and grated rind

Beat the egg and add the other ingredients in the order given. Cook over hot water for about 15 minutes, stirring constantly.

Honey Sauce No. 2.

1-3 cup whipping cream
1 teaspoon lemon juice
¼ to ½ cup honey

Whip cream until thick, add honey and lemon juice, whipping constantly.

If your fruit salad needs a little something to take it out of the commonplace, serve it with honey dressing.

Honey Dressing.

Add ¼ cup honey to French dressing. Omit pepper. Beat until frothy.

Honey may be substituted for the sweetening in puddings and cakes and cookies. In cakes the same amount of honey is used to replace the given amount of sugar. However, the liquid will have to be slightly decreased, as the honey will make a more liquid dough than the sugar. A teaspoon of soda is also added to cakes where sugar has been replaced by honey to counteract the acid reaction of the honey.

Honey Sandwich Bread.

½ cup bran
1 cup graham flour
1 cup white flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 egg
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
1-3 cup honey
½ cup chopped walnuts

Mix and sift the dry ingredients together. Add the nuts, mix, and add the milk, honey and beaten egg. Beat thoroughly. Pour into a greased oblong bread pan and bake one hour at 400 degrees F.

Rev. Mr. Ribble Will Be Rector In Falls Church

Grace Episcopal's Rector at Stanardsville Will Take Post Sunday.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., March 6.—The Rev. W. L. Ribble, rector of Grace Episcopal Church at Stanardsville, Greene County, for the last five years and minister in charge of five mountain missions connected with that district—St. James, Lydia; Cecil Memorial, Upper and Lower Pocosan, and Middle River—has accepted a call to Falls Church, in Fairfax County, one of the oldest Episcopal churches in Virginia, of which George Washington was a frequent attendant.

Mr. Ribble will enter upon his new duties on Sunday.

Mr. Ribble is a son of the Rev. Wallace Ribble, of Bessemer, Ala., formerly a missionary to Brazil, where his son was born. He was educated at the Episcopal High School, the University of Virginia, and the Virginia Theological Seminary, near Alexandria, Va. Upon his graduation and ordination, he and Miss Constance Murray Stroble, of Louisville, Ky., were married. The couple worked in the Brazilian mission fields for two years.

Mr. Ribble is the editor of The Virginia Churchman, organ of the diocese of Virginia, published in Richmond, and is also one of the examining chaplains of the Virginia Seminary.

During his five years in Stanardsville he has built up Grace Church from a mission to a parish church, with a vestry, and has strengthened the mission work in the district.

Mr. and Mrs. Ribble have three children.

Stolen Bond Sale Laid to Prisoner

Justice Department Agent Accuses Baltimore Man.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, March 6. — Aaron Greenfeld, accused by a Government witness with having sold bonds totaling $148,925, was held for a Federal grand jury today on a charge of receiving $15,000 of Government bonds, "knowing them to have been stolen."

A warrant upon which Greenfeld was held charged that on November 20 the Dime Savings Bank of Akron, Ohio, was robbed of $16,625 in bonds and that the next day $15,000 of the bonds were sold by Greenfeld to the Equitable Trust Co. here.

H. E. Roberts, a Department of Justice agent, testified at a hearing before Commissioner James K. Cullen that this was only one of several cases in which Greenfeld was charged with selling securities stolen in different cities.

Apple Freight Rate Slash Is Protested

Pacific Northwest Action Opposed in Virginia.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 6.—H. E. Ketner, commerce counsel for the State corporation commission, today filed a protest with the Interstate Commerce Commission against a reduction in the freight rates on apples from the Pacific Northwest. The railroads serving that territory have announced a reduction of 25 cents per 100 pounds, from the previous rate of $1.25 a hundred.

Mr. Ketner protested on behalf of the corporation commission and the Virginia and West Virginia horticultural societies against what he termed a "radical disruption" of the apple-rate structure and asked for a hearing before the I. C. C.

He said Virginia fruit growers had informed him that announcement of the reduction had already disturbed the apple market.

Relief Demand Grows In Franklin County

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., March 6.—Demand on relief agencies in Franklin County is increasing, E. B. Romig, head of emergency relief in district 4, announced yesterday. As of March 2, there were 1,460 families on direct relief, or approximately 6,257 persons. At the same time 950 families were at work accounting for 4,069 persons.

In the first week in February there were 1,202 families, or 5,115 persons, on direct relief, and on work relief 1,015 families. The number of cases with small incomes was 378, or 22 per cent. The number of cases without income was 1,623, or 78 per cent. The total amount paid for direct relief from December 30 to January 26 was $30,1[illegible] work relief, $38,334, or a total of $58,481.

Preachers Propose Sunday Liquor Ban

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 6.—The Methodist preachers' meeting of the Baltimore Conference at Central Y. M. C. A. here yesterday passed a resolution calling on the General Assembly of Maryland to pass legislation to prevent the sale of alcoholic liquors on Sundays in the neighborhood of churches and schools and where gasoline is sold. It is urged these provisions be placed in the revised bill for Allegany County.

The resolution is signed by the Rev. Jesse P. Dawson, jr., president pro. tem.; the Rev. Jacob H. Snyder, secretary, and the Rev. Alvin T. Perkins, chairman of the temperance committee.

Farmer Found Hanged in Barn

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Luray, Va., March 6.—Isaac N. Long, sr., 82, one of the wealthiest farmers of Page County, last night hanged himself with a trace chain in his barn, eight miles south of Luray.

Three years ago Long's brother-in-law, S. H. Spitler, took his own life and the former is said to have been brooding since.

Long went to the second story of his barn, adjusted the chain around his neck and stepped off a box. The body was found by his son, Isaac N. Long, jr.

Baker Relatives Will Get Report

Over 100 in Virginia Seek Share of $30,000,000.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Strasburg, Va., March 6.—Representatives of more than 100 Baker families and relatives in the Shenandoah Valley, seeking to share in the $30,000,000 estate of the late Peter Baker, wealthy Philadelphian, will meet here March 11 to hear detailed reports of Attorney D. W. Burruss and Delegate R. H. Baker, whom they sent to a hearing of the Baker case in Orphans Court in Philadelphia, on February 1.

Several hundred members of the related families in the Valley are expected to be in attendance, and it is stated an association will be formed for the purpose of assisting the court and estate attorneys in their disposition of the properties involved.

The association is expected to operate under a charter, secured by a Pennsylvania group in Pittsburgh, known as the "League of Baker Heirs."

Forestry Unit Hits Land Sale For Cemetery

Opposes Bill to Give Up Tract Adjoining Park for Church Use.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., March 6.—Opposition to a bill introduced in the Legislature by Delegate Harvey Miller, of Washington County, providing for the sale of a strip of land along the Old Braddock Trail, adjoining the Fort Frederick State Park, to the Evangelical Church of Mount Carmel to be used for extending its graveyard, has developed here following a protest registered by the State Department of Forestry, which owns the Fort Frederick park.

Explaining the opposition of his department, State Forester F. W. Besley in a letter to the Hagerstown Chamber of Commerce states it is unreasonable to take away important road frontage from a State park when expansion could be had in any of the other three directions from the property belonging to the members of the church.

The State acquired the farm on which Fort Frederick is located in 1922 at a cost of $12,000, and the Federal Government through the CCC camp located there under State supervision, has spent more than $100,000 in developing the fort and adjacent park. The property is being developed as a historical shrine and State park, which will attract thousands of visitors and to have the frontage of this property monopolized by a cemetery seems preposterous, says Forester Besley.

The local Chamber of Commerce, the efforts of which in recent years have been partially responsible for the developments of the fort as a historical shrine, will consider Besley's letter at a meeting of the board of directors this week.

Unemployed Man Kills Wife, Self

Tragedy Occurs at Virginia Home of Suicide's Sister.

By the Associated Press.

Hopewell, Va., March 6.—Returning a verdict of murder and suicide, Coroner J. C. Bodow, of Hopewell, today said he would not conduct an inquest into the shooting last night which cost the lives of George Odell Driver, 29, and his wife, Mrs. Glennie Lee Driver, about 27.

Driver shot and killed his wife in the front yard of the home of his sister, Mrs. William Kirman, and then turned the pistol on himself.

Police said a motive had not been found, but it was believed Driver was brooding over lack of steady employment.

Dorchester Seeks New Scout Chief

Drive Launched to Raise $700 in County.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cambridge, Md., March 6.—Persons interested in the Boy Scout movement have launched a campaign to raise $700 in a week in Dorchester County for a director who would organize and direct new troops in Salisbury, Easton and Cambridge.

This week has been named for the drive, which will end with a luncheon Monday, when all funds will be received.

To further the cause 25 men have been named, with the following captains: Dr. Robert Weygand, representing Dorchester Post, No. 91, American Legion; Calvin Harrington, jr., Cambridge Lodge of Elks; J. Howard Phillips, Cambridge Rotary, and Russell S. Davis, Cambridge Lodge of Masons. John Noble, of Easton, is chairman of the counties of Talbot, Dorchester and Caroline.

HERE'S what's GREATER THAN GREAT!

The finest in the world improved—that's what it is. The great Amoco-Gas is now GREATER Amoco-Gas!

WHAT MADE IT POSSIBLE!

New patented processes.

New basic gasoline into which more available energy from raw crudes is being put than was ever before possible.

Increase in the percentage of the most costly of Amoco's exclusive ingredients.

WHAT THIS MEANS TO YOU!

1. GREATER Amoco-Gas, among other superiorities, sets a new world's high in calorific★ value.
2. It contains more heat units per gallon than any other gasoline or motor fuel.
3. This definitely means more power and more miles per gallon.
4. It takes less fuel to get more results. It's the biggest gallon of motor fuel on the market today.
5. There is nothing else like GREATER Amoco-Gas. It is distinctive; it is different!

DO THIS: No matter what gas you are using today, you owe it to your pocketbook to try this new GREATER Amoco-Gas. GREATER Amoco-Gas costs us more to produce, but is sold to the motorist on the same basis as the previous Amoco-Gas. Prove to yourself that GREATER Amoco-Gas is the biggest gallon of motor fuel you can buy. Sold from Maine to Florida and inland.

Flood Leaves Michigan Town With Big Loss

By the Associated Press.

Sebewaing, Mich., March 6.—This Saginaw Bay village counted tonight the cost of the worst flood and fire in its history, as the swollen Sebewaing River slowly receded to its normal course. City officials estimated the damage at $175,000.

The John C. Liken & Co. department store was in ruins, swept by fire attributed to a short circuit originating in the flooded basement.

Eight blocks of downtown streets and a wide expanse of residential territory still were under water. A dozen families were unable yet to return to homes from which the flood drove them last night. Huge cakes of ice and an inch or more of silt were left in the wake of the waters, where they had subsided. Many feet of pavements were washed out or undermined.

There were two gaps in the Pere Marquette Railroad tracks, each 500 feet long, and the village had no rail communication with the outside world. The only mail delivery was by truck from Unionville. Railroad maintenance men hoped to have the washouts repaired tomorrow.

The flood was attributed to the mild temperatures, coming on the heels of recent heavy snows, which sent the river out of control. The river drains both Huron and Tuscola County areas.

At its crest the river was 12 feet above normal. Tonight the level had dropped about 4 feet, and the gradual subsidence was expected to continue unless there should be a heavy rainfall. The weather was clear today.

Meridian, Miss., March 6 (AP).—Mississippi and Alabama today were almost waterlogged from torrential rains of the last 24 to 48 hours that sent small streams into rampages and in many instances beyond their banks.

The heaviest precipitation centered around southeast Mississippi and south Alabama in the vicinity of Mobile. Two to 6 inches of rain had been measured there up to today, when some points reported a cessation.

43 Moslem Cultists Jailed for Contempt

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—Twenty-three women and 20 men, members of the Negro Moslem cult which precipitated a riot in the woman's court yesterday, were convicted of contempt of court today and sentenced to jail. Police Capt. Joseph Palczynski died of a heart attack during the riot and a bailiff and two cult members were wounded.

Arraigned before Judge Edward S. Scheffler, in whose court the disturbance took place, the women prisoners were given 30-day jail sentences and the men were ordered to jail for six months.

Missionary Party Escapes Red China

Eluded Death by 'Miracle of God,' Refugees Say.

By the Associated Press.

Hankow, China, March 6.—A party of 16 refugees and missionaries, including a 1-month-old child, arrived here today after a perilous overland journey from the Communist Shensi area, and attributed their escape from death to a "miracle of God."

Over the plains and mountains, gripped in the snows of a rigorous winter, the party traveled to safety.

A. Moore, leader of the refugees, all of whom are British, said the first ten days afoot through the fringe of the Communist-ridden territory was a most harrowing experience. The women became weary, lame and exhausted.

After reaching the Han River, the missionaries continued to the southeast aboard junks. The last stages of the long hard journey were made in buses and trains.

Judges Are Named For Apple Festival

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, March 6.—Lester D. Arnold, of this city, will be chairman of the judging of floats that participate in the parades of the twelfth Apple Blossom Festival, it was announced today by F. A. Read, jr., director general. Other judges will be distinguished guests appointed by Mr Arnold.

It also was announced by Mr. Read that nearly 3,000 school children from all sections of the county will march in one of the parades and a committee headed by R. E. Aylor, principal of the Stephens City School, has been designated to map out details of this feature.

Judges also have been named for the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and Drum and Bugle Corps, E. C. Goss, J. P. Hayley and A. Lee Coble being selected.

Mrs. Gould Paid To Meet Men, Witness Avers

Reputation Is Defended by Elderly, Deaf Chicago Housewife.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 6.—Comely Mrs. Wilma E. Gould was pictured in supreme court today as a woman willing to pay for introductions to wealthy men, and as a former Chicago dressmaker—industrious and "of excellent reputation."

After John Stanley, one-time proprietor of a Paris bar, testified that Mrs. Gould offered to "take care of him" if he would introduce her to his wealthy male patrons, an elderly white-haired Chicago housewife was called as a rebuttal witness in Mrs. Gould's $500,000 "framing" suit.

The witness was Mrs. Ruth Hickey Gahan. She was so deaf that attorneys had to bellow in her ear.

Contradicting testimony given earlier by Mrs. Marion Peterson, who declared that the plaintiff had been employed in questionable practices in Chicago in the immediate post-war years, Mrs. Gahan said that Mrs. Gould had conducted a dressmaking establishment at several Chicago addresses during that period.

"What was her reputation?" shouted Henry Uterhart, attorney for Mrs. Gould, who charges that three defendants had hired the bogus prince, Mike Romanoff, christened Harry Gerguson, to compromise her for divorce evidence.

"It was excellent," the witness replied.

Counsel for the three defendants, Norman J. Gould, brother of Edward Gould, the plaintiff's husband; Elwood W. Kemp, and Gerard Luisi, private detective, rested their case today without calling "Prince Mike." The "Prince" was not in court today.

Tax on Chain Stores Is Upheld in Michigan

Lansing, Mich., March 6 (AP).—The Michigan Supreme Court affirmed today the constitutionality of the State chain-store tax.

The tax law, enacted by the 1933 Legislature, imposed an annual tax of $10 on each store of chains operating not more than three units, and graduated the fee up to $250 for each unit of chains numbering over 25. Total revenues under the law were estimated by officials at $171,409 since the law went into effect.

Women Juror Bills Dealt Telling Blow By Maryland House

Compulsion Measures, Option Are Rejected After Debate.

Reports on Both Are Unfavorable

By Francis O. White, Jr.,
A Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—Jury service for women of Maryland was dealt a knockout blow in the House of Representatives today when two measures, one making such service compulsory, and the other optional, were unfavorably reported, and finally tabled after an hour's debate. The bill that embraced compulsory provisions was voted down, 75 to 33, and the optional proposal, 69 to 40.

Both bills were brought to the floor with unfavorable reports from the judiciary committee. First to be acted upon was the compulsory measure, which was sponsored by the four women members of the House. Seeking to substitute the measure for the report, Miss Ruth Shoemaker, Montgomery County, asserted women asked jury service, not as an honor, but as part of their duty as citizens. After a series of arguments pro and con, Representative Joseph Griesacker, Baltimore City, chairman of the judiciary group, finally called for a vote on the committee report and then on a motion to table the measure. Griesacker said:

"A small minority of women, well organized, intelligent and charming, may want jury service, but the vast majority of their sex do not."

With the compulsory bill disposed of, the optional measure, introduced by Representative Daniel Chambers, Baltimore City, was brought out.

Many Bills Filed.

Among nearly two score bills filed in the House today was a group of eight providing material changes in criminal statutes. They were offered by Speaker Emanuel Gorfine at the request of State's Attorney Bernard J. Wells, of Baltimore City.

Outstanding among the measures was the one to fix death as a penalty for kidnaping. The maximum penalty under present law is 30 years' imprisonment. The new proposal would make the sentence discretionary with the court.

Provisions of the other bills, briefly stated, are:

A uniform act relating to attendance of witnesses from without the State in criminal cases.

Giving courts discretionary power in criminal or civil cases to allow a jury to separate or keep them under care of proper officials before a case is submitted to a jury.

Allowing persons to petition court for writ of habeas corpus, to be granted, dependent upon the petition and accompanying documents.

Broadening the definition of burglary to include breaking into a dwelling, storehouse, warehouse or other outhouse, with intent to commit larceny of personal goods of less than $25 value.

Providing that in manslaughter cases where death resulted from driving an automobile or other vehicle, the sentence provided includes a term in the penitentiary up to three years, or fine of not more than $500, or jail imprisonment up to two years or a fine and jail term both in the court's discretion.

Allowing persons convicted of wife desertion to be sentenced either to jail or the house of correction.

Giving courts discretion between the death sentence, life term in the penitentiary or confinement in the penitentiary for not less than 18 months, or more than 21 years, for conviction of criminal assault.

Bridge Plan Up Again.

A bill providing for bridging the Chesapeake Bay was introduced in the House by Representatives William Howard, Baltimore County. It was similar to the measure offered last night in the Senate. It provides for setting up a three-man commission, with authority to issue $10,000,000 bonds and also to buy existing ferries, at an outlay of $1,200,000. Both bills are patterened much after proposals presented at legislative assemblies regularly during the last decade. The project, however, never made much headway largely because of heavy expense. Route of the proposed span would be from Baltimore County to a point on Kent Island.

Representative Jacob Blum, Baltimore City, sent two measures to the House desk. One would make null and void any waiver of mechanics' liens by laborers, and the other would prohibit waiver of rights for property exempted by law from seizure for debt.

The Senate passed and sent to the Governor the bill by the Wicomico County delegation providing for the election of three councilmen of Salisbury in the odd years and the mayor and two councilmen in the even years, the plan being to eliminate short-term councilmen.

The Senate also approved the following other House bills, now ready for action by the Governor:

Regulating liquor license fees in Annapolis.

Authorizing the Mayor and Council of Annapolis to fill unexpired terms of any of its members.

Authorizing Kent County commissioners to pay certain funds to three volunteer fire companies.

Abolishing the post of counselor in Annapolis City council and providing for appointment of a city solicitor by the council, who would not be entitled to a vote in the body, changing terms of office and reducing salaries of supervisors.

Senate Proposals.

The Senate recived the following new proposals:

Fixing the salary of the juvenile court judge in Allegany County at $2,500, to be paid by the county commissioners; Cumberland now pays one-third of the salary.

Transferring the House of Reformation to control of State, changing its name to the Maryland Training School for Colored Boys and placing its management under a board consisting of the Governor, State treasurer, comptroller and 11 persons named by the Governor, six of whom shall be Negroes.

Prohibiting the sale of deadly weapons to minors.

Providing for the appointment of a Montgomery County attorney at an annual salary of $2,500.

Joint resolution seeking to restore the State game warden's salary, reduced in the Governor's budget from $4,800 to $1,800 per annum.

Joint resolution requesting the State's representatives in Congress to support the Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill.

In the House the Frederick County delegation sponsored a bill to allow fishing in all streams that empty into the Monocacy River. Under present law anglers are prohibited from fishing beyond a point of 50 yards in the mouth of such streams.

Killing of deer with two or more points on their antlers would be prohibited under a bill by the Garrett County delegation. The Garrett delegation also presented a proposal for certain changes in the county game laws.

Bill Requires Wives to Have Job or Income

Maryland Measure Lists Conditions for Issuing Marriage Licenses.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—Delegate Lawrence F. Appel apparently would do away with moneyless husbands in Maryland.

He introduced a bill today which would require that a woman, before granted a marriage license, must show that:

She has a regular and permanent job or position paying a salary sufficient to enable her to support her prospective husband in the comfort, style and manner to which he has been accustomed; or,

That she has sufficient sound investments from which she receives an adequate income for the purposes above enumerated.

That she has a bank account which she will place in the joint names of her husband and herself;

That she owns an automobile which she will share equally with her husband or will purchase one for his exclusive use if he so desires.

Liquor Bills Offered.

The bill, which does not say where would-be husbands could find such women, went to the committee on judicial proceedings.

Three measures regarding the sale of alcoholic beverages in Maryland were introduced in the House of Delegates.

The bills were sponsored by Delegates Walter M. Magruder (Fusionist), Montgomery, and Carl Hoffman (Democrat), Somerset.

The measures would:

Prohibit sale of alcoholic beverages on Sunday.

Prohibit sale of alcoholic beverages within 300 feet of a church or school.

Prohibit sale of alcoholic beverages in filling stations where gasoline is sold for more than one pump.

All the bills were referred to the ways and means committee for study.

Society of Composers Assailed.

Senator Stedman Prescott (Democrat), Montgomery, introduced a Senate resolution asking that Congress investigate the activities of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers of New York and its subsidiaries. The resolution stated that "certain abuses now being pursued by the society upon hundreds of corporations, firms and persons conducting establishments wherein music is played will be followed by grave consequences unless abated."

The biennial budget, amended in committee, was passed on second reading by the Senate.

Committee amendments were adopted without a change and only one amendment was offered from the floor, when Senator Harry Phoebus (Republican), Somerset, moved to strike from the bill the yearly appropriation of $13,687 for the Tolchester ferry.

The approximate total of the budget as it now stands is $62,210,000.

Co. A, 1st Maryland, Gets Awards for Firing at Camp Ritchie.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., March 6.—Medals for qualifications in small arms firing at Camp Ritchie, near Cascade, last summer, were presented last night at the annual Federal and State inspection of Company A, this city, First Maryland Regiment, Maryland National Guard, at the State Armory. The full roster of the company, including three officers and about 100 men, was present.

The inspection was conducted by Capt. L. E. McGregor for the Government, and Col. D. John Markey, this city, commanding officer of the regiment for the State. Various maneuverings were required of the company, commanded by Capt. Guy Anders. In addition to the inspection officers and members, Battalion commander, Maj. Winfield B. Harwood, Bel Air; Lieut. Col. Elmer F. Munshower, this city, executive officer of the regiment, and Capt. Hopkins, Company D, Bel Air, attended. Maj. Harwood assisted Col. Markey in presenting the medals. Company A showed the largest increase in qualifications of any unit in the regiment, embracing the larger cities and towns of the State outside of Baltimore.

Those receiving bars or badges for qualifications with .30-caliber rifle:

Expert riflemen—Second Lieut. Allen W. Seeger, Sergt. Irving C. Strine, First Sergt. Alton E. Shaff, Sergts. James E. Bartels, Harvey E. Boone, Walter J. Rinehart and Henry J. Mask; Corpls. Allen R. Kinsey, Wilbur H. Rinehart and Wilbur Federline; Private Lee G. Layman.

Marksmen—Sergt. Walter A. Abrecht; Privates, first class, Lawrence G. Bruchey, Roy W. Clem; Privates John H. Stewart, jr., Gilmer D. Smith, Richard M. Seabrist, Roy K. Keaney, James R. Keeney, Earl W. Bartels, Paul W. Butler, Clyde E. Eyler, Maurice S. DeLashmutt, Charles J. Cramer, William S. Hahn, Homer E. Harris, Rodney W. Toms, William M. Varner, Soureen L. Welty and James W. Anderson.

Those receiving medals for qualifications with automatic rifle:

Marksmen—Privates, first class, Luther M. Staley, Arthur R. Stine, Raymond H. Crum, Eugene W. Grumbine; Privates Harry M. McGill, James F. Fiby and Frank L. Wright.

Marksmen for qualifications for pistol:

Milk Producers Get Increase in Frederick

Frederick, Md., March 6 (AP).—Farmers are receiving an increase of 15 per cent per hundred pounds for milk sold to distributors in Frederick. The former price was about $1.60 a hundred pounds.

Henry R. Shoemaker, county agent, represented the Frederick County Milk Producers Association in negotiating the increase, it was said. Further price discussions will take place April 1.

Too Kind

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., March 6.—Be kind to dumb animals, but to smart ones, pay no attention. That is the advice of Miss Louise Gordon, of this city, who uses a German shepherd dog to guide her around Waynesboro.

The dog, especially trained as a guide and companion for the blind, is exceptionally affectionate, but it spoils him, Miss Gordon said, in an appeal to persons to refrain from petting the dog and offering it assistance in crossing street intersections. The dog is the only one of its kind in this section of the Cumberland Valley.

Back President, Farley Asks Young Democrats of Virginia

"Almost Unexplored Field of Economic Security" Cited by Postmaster General, Speaking at Dinner in Richmond.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 6.—The present, not merely the future, represents the opportunity of youth, Postmaster General James A. Farley said tonight, urging young Democrats to support President Roosevelt and to blaze trails into "the almost unexplored field of economic security."

"There is no longer a trackless West by traversing which you can perform a service to your country and thereby win undying fame," the national Democratic chairman said. "There is, however, a vast frontier that awaits new pioneers.

"I mean the almost unexplored field of economic security into which a trail must be blazed that will make it impossible for any future depression to leave millions of our people so destitute that they must accept a Government dole to keep from starvation.

"It must be a safe trail that will develop into a broad highway to prosperity, preserving all our constitutional landmarks, lest we be plunged into a morass infinitely worse than anything we have encountered."

Mr. Farley said that since the depression was at its worst business had advanced to a gratifying degree, unemployment had been lessened and the bank problem solved so that the financial structure is safe.

"But we can not maintain these gains if we stand still, let alone continue the progress to complete recovery," he added, speaking before Young Democrats of the Third Virginia District at a dinner tonight.

"Forces are at work," he continued, "that tend to undermine the Government's plan to go forward along the same lines that have accomplished so much. Many people are impatient that everything has not been done at once and are forwarding programs that can not, if they are followed, fail to wreck us anew."

He said partisan poltics had come into the picture and that selfish ambitions have their part, although he asserted there were undoubtedly many sincere people who think they have a better solution to the problems of the President.

"In any event it is going to require the hardest work and the deepest thought of every forward-looking patriotic citizen to put our country back on the road of contentment and prosperity, so I call on every one of you to do his part," Mr. Farley said.

The Postmaster General said that Virginia perhaps had had a smaller percentage of failure in public office than any other State, and he referred to Senators Carter Glass and Harry Byrd, who have been frequent opponents of Roosevelt recommendations, including the pending $4,880,000,000 work relief bill, as "carrying on the line of square dealing, hard hitting, honest and courageoous Virginia Senators." He also praised Gov. Peery and Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson, who represented Virginia for many years in the Senate.

The country today, he said, is going through a period of stress as great as any since young men stood to their guns barefooted, ragged and hungry with George Washington.

The national Democratic chairman said party politics of the most practical kind are necessary in a nation committed to the two-party system, but he said all the tricks of the politician amount to little unless the condidate is worthy of the position.

"The people are as quick to punish as to reward when it comes to public office," he said.

He said President Roosevelt had no delusions as to the task facing him when he entered the White House and that the President had never lost sight of those difficulties.

"Fortunately," Mr. Farley said, "he is a man of infinite patience as well as capacity, courage and industry. He has met each situation as it arose without panic, without discouragement and without the slightest lessening of his faith in the ultimate outcome. Under such a leader, the war against adversity is bound to result in victory. You placed him where he is. You put the burden of recovery upon his shoulders. And I summon you now to give him the same loyalty, the same confidence, that you exhibited in 1932 and 1934, and I know that the call will be heeded by you and that you will celebrate with him a final victory more important to our beloved country than any victory we have won."

Richmond Chosen For Convention

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 6.—Richmond today was chosen for the annual convention of the Young Democrats of Virginia this year.

The dates of the convention were left to be fixed by the president, John Galleher, but the committee put itself on record as favoring a date after the Democratic primary on August 6.

No definite decision was made as to the State convention date, pending the settlement of a date for the national convention to be held in the Midwest some time in August.

It was thought probable that the State convention would be held late in August or early in September.

'Tipsy' Driver Draws 90 Days At Winchester

Fined $250 and Permit Revoked After Two Hit-Run Crashes.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., March 6.—A swift series of events last night had a sequel in court today for Homer Garber, 42, connected with a local wholesale firm, who was fined $250 and costs, sentenced to 90 days in jail and forced to surrender his driver's permit for three years when tried on a charge of drunken driving, his second offense of this kind.

Two charges of leaving the scene of an accident still are pending against Garber.

Last night, while Officer Jack Bowers was cruising in a patrol car, a car driven by Garber sideswiped the machine. Pursuing, the officer saw the car sideswipe another without stopping.

Police Seeking Third Suspect In Girl's Death

Detective Reveals 'Tip-Off,' Flight of Man Linked to Waynesboro Case.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Va., March 6.—The spotlight was turned today on the search for a third man wanted in connection with the fatal attack here on Pauline Parry, pretty young rayon worker, early August 19, 1934.

Detective Guy Miller, who obtained warrants yesterday charging James Parry and Ernest Carter with the crime, said today a third person whom he intended to take into custody had been "tipped off and left town." He added the man's whereabouts was believed known and his arrest was expected shortly.

Commonwealth's Attorney John D. White ordered Parry and Carter held without bail in the Augusta County Jail until he completes study of evidence turned over to him by Miller. He indicated he probably would question the men tomorrow.

Miller charges young Parry caused his sister's death in order to collect an insurance policy which named him beneficiary. Mrs. Parry, 20-year-old wife of the accused man, said today her husband had received $300 from a policy held by Pauline and at the time of his arrest was attempting to obtain the balance due, about $1,000. She asserted her husband sought this money in order to settle a $600 hospital bill owed by his dead sister.

Mrs. Parry stated Felix E. Edmunds, Waynesboro attorney, had been engaged to defend her husband. She declared Parry "did not know Ernest Carter at all" and could not explain why Carter had been linked with her husband in the crime. "Someone has made a terrible mistake," she added.

But $50,000 Allowance of Senate Committee May Be 'Blind.'

Measure's Death May Come Later

Nice's Radio Appeal for Support of Inquiry Believed Factor.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—Democratic leaders today gave apparent consent to the investigation of the State government as it functioned under former Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, an investigation proposed and fathered by the present Republican Governor, Harry W. Nice.

The Senate finance committee allowed $50,000 for the investigation. In his original budget, Gov. Nice asked $150,000. The Republican plan was for the investigating committee to be named by the Governor, but the bill establishing this committee is still hung up in the legislative machine.

The allowance of even $50,000 for the investigation was something of a surprise to observers. Credit for the allowance is given generally, at least by the Republicans, to Gov. Nice's recent radio speech. In this he pointed to the "sudden appearance" of a deficit in State funds. He asked his hearers to write their delegates and senators, calling on them to vote for the probe. Apparently more persons write to their representatives than any one of them would admit.

However, the probe fund still has two pitfalls to negotiate before Republicans can claim victory for their measure. It is possible that the probe appropriation was retained in the budget as reported out by the Senate only as a matter of Democratic strategy. If the fund had been taken from the budget in committee, the committee members would have to bear all the blame for blocking the probe.

"The Mikado," Old Stand-by of the Amateurs, Will Be 50 Years Old This Month

Golden Jubilee To Be Observed Out in Chicago

By Nelson B. Bell.

Fresh in the minds of the Capital's theatergoers by virtue of its splendid performance recently at the National Theater by the distinguished artists of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, from the Savoy Theater, London, "The Mikado," that old war-horse of the Gilbert and Sullivan repertoire, will attain its golden jubilee anniversary in the Erlanger Theater, Chicago, on March 14.

On that night it will be exactly 50 years since "The Mikado" first was performed in London's famous Savoy Theater on March 14, 1885.

Those whose memories go back to 1912 in the American theater will recall that in the 1885 sequences in "Milestones," a drama of progress written in collaboration by Edward Knoblock and the late Arnold Bennett, reference was made to "The Mikado," as "a new piece at the Savoy that they say is very good." It was.

Richard Collett, general manager of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, is expected to arrive in this country from London this week to be present at and participate in the festivities that will attend the fiftieth anniversary presentation of "The Mikado" in Chicago a week from tomorrow night.

If all of the amateurs who have sung in "The Mikado" could be assembled to form an audience for this performance, they would have to put it on in the Grand Canyon to accommodate the crowd!

While you are awaiting the final result of that outdoor indoor-baseball game between the Dorsey Brothers Orchestra and Moe Baer's Band, to be played today, you may be interested to know that by long-distance phone yesterday Tom and Jimmy Dorsey consummated a contract to open the Glen Island Casino, a celebrated night spot at New Rochelle, N. Y., where the late Eddie Foy and all the little Foys used to live when the family alternated between being a vaudeville act and a baseball nine! The Dorsey contract becomes effective next Labor Day, which is what you might call taking time by the fetlock, or something.

Too Much Dressing!

While you are watching her one-person fashion revue in "Living on Velvet," the current screen feature at the Earle, Kay Francis is convalescing from an attack of influenza in the Good Samaritan Hospital in Hollywood, according to wire advices from the Warner Brothers West Coast studios.

Although far from being well, Miss Francis on a recent week-end was hostess at a "nautical party" which was attended by practically all of Hollywood and voted one of the outstanding social events of this or any other season in the film colony.

For the next 10 days the star purposes to be secluded from the world to enjoy a complete rest. All visitors, including her most intimate friends, are denied admittance to her room in the hospital.

One wonders if all those costume changes in "Living on Velvet" had anything to do with wearing her down.

Always keeping one jump ahead of his competitors—who else ever suspected there were so many ways of making geometrical designs out of Mack Sennett bathing beauties?—Busby Berkeley finally has put his chorus girls on horses for a scene in "Caliente." Ten chorines, a thoughtful observer points out, will be eating their meals off ten mantelpieces after riding ten white horses on ten treadmills these next few days. I refer you to the cavalry troop of The Post's sports department for corroborative evidence—as fine a bunch of rookies as ever fell off in the mud!

Red, White, etc.

Political and factional differences forgotten in a common cause, both White and Red Russians are cooperating with the Columbia Players to make their production of Chekhov's play of "Uncle Vanya" authentic in every detail.

The play is scheduled for presentation in Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets northwest, a week from tonight with a repeat performance Thursday night, and the members of the cast and production staff have spent much time gathering details of Russian life and customs in the 1880s, when the action of the drama takes place.

Aurora Poston, under whose direction the play is being produced, and Eileen Fowler, who will appear in the leading role, have conferred with First Secretary Alexei Fedorovitch Neymann of the Russian Embassy on pronunciation of names and other details.

Over the Teacups.

Others took advantage of the recent visit to Washington of Mme. Techarvin, lecturer and author of "Escape From the Soviets," to learn all about the art of serving tea in the Russian home of the old regime and the etiquette of the samovar. They also have sought advice from Capt. I. Mishtowt, formerly of the Imperial Russian Navy, and Mrs. Mishtowt.

The settings and the costumes for "Uncle Vanya" have been designed with great attention to detail, so that they will be punctiliously correct.

All of which seems like a vast amount of thoughtful preparation for a play to be presented at a top price of 83 cents for reserved seats. Tickets are on sale, incidentally, at T. Arthur Smith's, 1330 G street.

Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran of the National Theater returned from New York late Monday night full of plans for the forthcoming eleventh annual spring and summer season of the National Theater Players. The old Panjandrum has several surprises up his sleeve for the faithful. With regard to the remaining bookings for the regular season of touring road attractions, they are as set forth in this identical space last Monday, March 4.

A Colorful Yarn.

According to rumors trickling back from the West Coast, every man, woman and child engaged in the production of "Becky Sharp" for John Hay (Jock) Whitney—one of the army of reputed purchasers of Universal Pictures Corporation, you will remember—stands to make a teapot full of money on Technicolor stock.

This new film version of the Thackery novel is being "shot" entirely in Technicolor's new multiple-tone process. Every time Jock Whitney buys raw stock for "Becky" the stock goes up. Everyone on the set bought into the issue at the beginning of the picture to take a flier.

"Becky Sharp" already has nicked the Whitney bankroll for a paltry $900,000, or thereabouts. If Jock loses on the fillum as entertainment, he'll make it all back on Technicolor—which seems to be an instance in which each hand knows precisely what the other is doing and, between the two of them, figures to turn a profit.

Nice going.

"Power," the Gaumont-British production starring Conrad Veidt, has caught on as a motion picture of extraordinary dramatic fiber to such an extent locally that it will probably be continued as the major attraction at the Belasco Theater through next Wednesday, March 13. Thereafter it will be the fixed policy of the Belasco, under its new emergence as the Washington home of foreign-made pictures, to open its new bills on Thursday of each week.

"Take 'Em Off—We Know You!"

Twenty-five bums recently paraded before the cameras in the Astoria Studio, where Ben Hecht and Charlie MacArthur are filming their latest feature, "Miracle in 49th Street."

Only 23 of the bums, however, were of the bona fide or Bowery variety. They actually were conscripted for free meals, smokes and $7.50 in money for the day's professional loafing in a flop-house sequence in the picture.

The last two derelicts were just imitations of Bowery habitues. They had dirt smeared over their eyes and around their ears and tufts of hair about nostrils and chin that looked like stubby hang-overs.

As a matter of fact, they were a couple of men who wanted to try their hands at something more than mere writing and producing.

You guessed it! They were Hecht and MacArthur, finally sunken to the low level of hiding behind false mustaches!

Now, you fellow with the scissors, do your duty by the cutting-room floor!

No less a personality than Mickey Mouse is to present a bed to the Sick Children's Hospital at Yorkhill, Glasgow, Scotland. Perhaps it should be explained that the bed is being presented by the Cinematograph Benevolent Fund, but it will be known as the "Mickey Mouse Bed" and a plaque signed by Walt Disney himself will be hung above it.

Retarded Recovery Note.

If you were a small child, how would YOU like to try to get well with the constant thought that there was a mouse back of your bed?

The firing squad for anybody answering, "I Disney ken!"

Bing Has New Screen Sweetheart

When "Mississippi," a story of the South of 1860, in which W. C. Fields also is importantly cast, arrives on a local screen, a new leading woman will be seen opposite Bing, the crooning Crosby. She is Joan Bennett, youngest daughter of the noted actor, Richard. They are pictured here in the quaint costumes of the period. Bing's brother, Bob, by the way, is barytoning locally this week as soloist with the Dorsey Brothers Orchestra, headlining the stage show at the Earle Theater.

Gypsy Choir Will Give Church Benefit Tonight

A performance of "The Gypsy Trail" will be given tonight by the Washington Gypsy Chorus, under the direction of Robert Frederick Freund, in the auditorium of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School, Forty-sixth and Elm streets, Chevy Chase. Guest artists will be Sylvia Kaplovitz, accordion player, and Emily Lindsay, dancer, of the Marion Venable studios.

Members of the chorus include Myrtle Alcorn, Doris Abbott, Elizabeth Athey, Irma Calvert, Marie Doughty, Anne Evans, Carrie Gray, Jessie Perkins, Hilda Rogers, Annie Tresselt, Jean White, Edith Young, Roy Gray, C. A. McCallip, Julian Murray, Walter Redit, J. L. Young, Robert Case, Benjamin Johnson and J. L. Young, jr. The accompanist is Edna Lee Freund and George K. Perkins is the violinist.

'Punch' Killing Trial Opening Set for Today

Fredericksburg Man Will Face Jury for Fatal Blow in Fight.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 6.—Paul Noblett, 26-year-old local meat cutter, will go on trial in Corporation Court tomorrow morning to answer for the "one-punch" killing of John M. Sinclair, member of the "Bloody Angle" CCC Camp and former Washington resident.

A panel of 20 Fredericksburg men was drawn this week and from this lot 12 will be picked to hear evidence against Noblett and his companion, William Calhoun, 18, in the affray which cost the life of Sinclair the night of January 20. Calhoun was indicted on a simple assault charge by the same special grand jury that brought in a true bill against Noblett.

Noblett and Calhoun were arrested several hours after L. H. McGee, mess sergeant at the CCC Camp, had driven to police headquarters in a car containing the dead body of his friend, Sinclair.

McGee told police he and Sinclair had been attacked by four men as they sat in their parked car on a downtown street. He then drove to headquarters, he said, not realizing Sinclair was dead.

Noblett and Calhoun were quoted by police as admitting their part in the affair. They followed McGee and Sinclair, they said, after Miss Gladys Calhoun, sister of Calhoun, had told of being accosted by the CCC workers. Finding the car containing the CCC pair parked about a block from the Calhoun home, Noblett and Calhoun said they approached it from either side. In the ensuing scuffle, according to police, Noblett struck Sinclair once with his fist while Calhoun and McGee exchanged blows.

Sinclair slumped forward in the seat, apparently unconscious. At a coroner's inquest it was revealed Sinclair had died of a broken neck. Sinclair's home was in Washington. For several months prior to his death he had been undergoing treatment at Walter Reed Hospital, Washington.

Red Men Dine On Anniversary

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charles Town, W. Va., March 6.—The members of Shenandoah Tribe, No. 89, Improved Order of Red Men, held their thirtieth anniversary banquet here last night. I. H. Russell was toastmaster.

John T. Porterfield, prosecuting attorney of Jefferson County and past great sachem of the Great Council of West Virginia, made the principal address. Short talks were made by Samuel Blum, great keeper of wampum and treasurer of the State orphans' board; Clayton L. Haines, former member of West Virginia House of Delegates and long associated with the local tribe; John W. Birkitt, charter member of Shenandoah Tribe; Charles F. Reininger, great sannap of the council of West Virginia.

Miss Harmon to Speak On Radio Activities

A talk on activities of radicals in American colleges will be given by Miss Helen Harmon, vice president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, tomorrow morning at the Mayflower Hotel at a meeting of the national defense committee of the District D. A. R.

Other speakers will be Mrs. Bates Warren and Mrs. Frank L. Ray. Mrs. Rice W. Means will preside.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Wandering Minstrel.

Hollywood, March 6.

IRVING BERLIN sits at his favorite piano with the sliding keyboard trying to write another song for the score of "Top Hat." He has written about 20 songs for this picture already, at the very most there will be eight songs in the picture. He could have handed in his first eight songs and radio would have been satisfied; in fact, they were. But Berlin is a hard man to please. He will get an idea for a lyric or a melody today and ask for yesterday's contribution to be returned. After a quarter of a century of writing popular songs, Berlin is as ambitious as a new song writer just entering the field and has a greater fear of flopping.

He knows that a popular songwriter is only as great as his last song. Berlin realizes that after you reach the heights the mob selects choice seats at the bottom of the hill, waiting for your fall. He knows this, for several years ago he heard them say: "Berlin has lost his touch. The parade has passed him by."

• • • •

Past performances mean nothing when you are dealing in a current currency like pop songs. For two years Berlin wrote songs, but they weren't on every one's lips. He knew what the songwriters were saying about him. One day he walked into Lindy's and said to a group of them, "That little colored boy who used to write all my hits is dead."

Berlin tried to laugh it off—but he was taking it very hard. Irving Berlin—with more hit songs to his credit than any song writer in America—and there was nothing in all the world he desired more than to write a hit song.

• • • •

IT is a terrible feeling to stand still and watch the parade pass you. Berlin told me that he lost confidence in himself. He would write a song, he said, and he'd be afraid to sing it for the office boy who was working for him. He would put it on the shelf believing it wasn't good enough.

He started to write a show, "Face the Music," with Moss Hart. He started, but he wanted to call it off. It was E. Ray Goetz who said to him: "Irving, you've got to go through with it, even if it's a flop. You've got to hear some one sing your songs and see an audience listen to them. It's your only chance. Go through with it."

Every one, in writing about Irving Berlin, will mention as his great song, "Alexander's Ragtime Band," or "All Alone," or "Say It With Music," or some other big hit. But do you know what song means the most to Berlin? He doesn't mention the song which established a new style in jazz writing. He mentions the song which did the most for Irving Berlin.

• • • •

Of all the songs he has written his favorite is "Say It Isn't So." It sold only half a million copies, and can't begin to compare to "What'll I Do" and "Always." It will never be as important as "Alexander." But it was Irving Berlin's comeback song. He had it on the shelf for six months, afraid to let the town hear it. The show gave him courage. He released it. It was another taste of that old beverage, success. It gave him the confidence he needed. It was his best answer to what they were saying: "The parade has passed him by." "Say It Isn't So."

• • • •

BERLIN cherishes his comeback more than his early success. It is a greater feat. He is still at that old piano turning them out. That piano is a story in itself. On that very piano he wrote "Alexander" and "You'd Be Surprised" and "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody," and all his other hits you can remember. It cost him $125 about 25 years ago. It cost him that amount to have it shipped here from New York. The piano has been with him in Florida, in Italy, and on that cruise on which he wrote most of the music for "As Thousands Cheer." It is the music box of this wandering minstrel. Radio pictures bought him a piano with a sliding keyboard, and it is in his office at the studio, but he seldom uses it. He insists he can write better on this old one, which is slightly out of tune. Berlin lives on the eighth floor of the Beverly Wilshire Hotel, but it is in the penthouse suite of rooms at this hotel that he keeps his piano. When he feels like working he goes to the suite with the piano.

• • • •

Berlin plays the piano using all his fingers, although he uses them as if they were ten thumbs. He likes to work in his pajamas and a bathrobe. He sang several of his new songs for me. He sings faintly, often making a mistake while playing or forgetting a word of his own lyric. He will shout at himself when he balls up one of his songs. On the top of the piano there is a book, which contains a copy of all the big songs he has written. And on the fly leaf of this book he has written a verse which is his credo. This is Berlin's song of songs: "Let me be a troubadour—and I will ask for nothing more—than one short hour or so—to sing my song and go."

Powell Ready to Take Job in Nats' Outfield, Griffith Believes

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

Biloxi, Miss., March 6.

I SEE by the papers that the big league umpires have been ranked by a poll of the ball players and that in the American League George Moriarty is placed at the top of the rating. The only inference that can be drawn from the poll is that Moriarty is the least disliked.

MORIARTY.

It would have been risky business for the ball players, this voting on the umpires, except for the fact that all ballots submitted to the St. Louis newspaper which conducted the poll were unsigned. An umpire, like an elephant, never forgets, and there are ball players who hold that that is not the only line of comparison, but we will skip that.

It required some courage to submit even an unsigned ballot on the qualifications of the umpires, although the ball players, to a man, probably found a great deal of satisfaction in this opportunity to strike back at the real autocrats of the game. On the field, the players are at the mercy of Hizzoner, the Umps, whose authority can be challenged only by the league president, who has very little desire to challenge it.

The umpires operate in the knowledge that any official reflection on their ability or their honesty is a reflection on the structural foundation of the game, at which both club owners and league presidents shy. The discharge of an umpire is always something to be avoided by the league because baseball, as a whole, must take the rap. It is a nice spot for the umps.

WHAT manner of man it is that seeks to carve for himself a career as a big league umpire, your humble servant can only conjecture. Theirs is the life of a twentieth century hermit, one who shuns and is shunned by his associates in the game, excluding fellow umpires.

By official order, they are not permitted to mingle with the ball players. They must even travel by different trains, stop at different hotels. Fraternizing with the players is out, even if the players would fraternize with them, and they must, of necessity, develop a long list of enemies among the ball players if they administer their duties either fairly or unfairly. There must be a winner or loser by each of their decisions.

Of course, the pay of a big league umpire is compensating. And, as they often say themselves, "you can't beat the hours." The umps are rated much as are the ball players along the salary scale. The best of them will draw down $11,000 or $12,000 for the season. The rookies are scaled at $6,000 and up. George Moriarty is tops in the wage scale. And then, of course, they work only six months out of the year, and to the lucky ones who get into the World Series there's $2,500 extra.

Their jobs are secure as long as they work together, baseball history has proved. As long as they back up each other's stories, refuse to challenge or reverse each other's decisions, there can be little possibility that the league president will find disfavor with them. He must accept their version of all questionable plays in preference to that of managers and club owners and is bounden to support them as a gesture of the game's unswerving honesty.

IT was because a pair of umpires fell out that one of them lost his job last year. Roy Van Grafian and Bill Summers were working a game in Detroit when the Nats played there during midseason of 1933. Van Grafian was proud of his record as the only umpire for whom the big leagues ever paid a purchase price. Summers was a rookie in his first season in serge.

Hank Greenberg, of the Tigers, slammed a ball against the left-field fence that was foul by four feet. Van Grafian, behind the plate, called it fair. Summers, stationed at third, called it foul. As umpire-in-chief, Van Grafian's decision stuck, but later he declared that he had been given the foul signal by Summers. In the dressing room, Summers denied it and offered to fight his colleague. Players of both teams stepped between them.

League President Harridge sent Umpire-in-Chief Tom Connolly to investigate. At a hearing, Van Grafian and Summers told identical stories, with Summers changing his version. In the belief that the rookie umpire had been coerced into coinciding with Van Grafian's story, Connolly made his report to Harridge. Van Grafian was dropped from the league the next season.

THE one the ball players like to tell best is the time Umpire Bill Klem was attending a baseball dinner at St. Petersburg. A messenger boy burst into the banquet hall with a telegram for Klem. The veteran umpire opened the envelope and hunted five full minutes for his glasses before he was able to note the contents, after which he realized his faux pas.

Hamas Must K. O. Schmeling Sunday to Win, Gallico Feels

By Paul Gallico.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, March 6.—There are two heavyweight prize fights scheduled within the next week or so. One is the return engagement of Max Schmeling and Steve Hamas in Hamburg, Germany, next Sunday afternoon, and the other is the clown bout arranged for the New York Garden for March 15 between Primo Carnera, the former heavyweight champion, and Ray Impelletierre, who is modestly described by his manager as the dreadnaught champion of the world.

I think there will be a couple of laughs in that one, as both big guys are very much afraid of one another, and in many ways the show should resemble the famous fight between Campolo and Carnera, in which both guys were so scared of one another that the Garden people had to visit each dressing room and bolster up the near-fainting contenders by promising each that the other was nigh to swooning and on the point of running out. It was all too true and the only way to get them into the ring together. As I remember, it turned into a pretty good fight at that, once they shook off the tremors and began punching.

The thing in Hamburg is more serious and there will be blood spilled. The worst licking Schmeling ever took standing up was from Hamas. Steve couldn't knock the German out that night in Philadelphia, but he slit him as if he were boxing with razors, and humiliated him no end. Schmeling has more pride and dignity than any boxer I have ever met. He can take a punch, but he can't take a kidding or a public humiliation such as Hamas gave him for ten rounds during which time Schmeling didn't hit him more than five solid punches.

The German will be more dangerous than he has ever been before. I don't know whether he can win, but I do know that the Messrs. Charley Harvey and Hamas are prize suckers for giving him a chance, even for dough. Hamas was so far out in front at the end of the fight in Philadelphia that no one could possibly say that he was not undisputed champion of Max Schmeling. If Hamas had pressed his claim he might have had the shot at Max Baer without lifting a finger, especially if Carnera and Impelletierre and Lasky and Braddock eliminate themselves, as they are very likely to do.

We once had an elimination tournament in these parts and it wound up very dismally because even the winners looked so bad that they ruined themselves as contenders.

The late Tex Rickard never believed in eliminations. He preferred to nominate a contender and then stick by him. The press and the public yelled at first and then came by the thousands to see his fights. You can always get an "if" out of a prize fight. Baer is a great hitter, but he has to connect. There are plenty of the boys who have been the route with him because he

Grove Cuts Loose, Shows Old Speed

By the Associated Press.

Sarasota, Fla., March 6.—Bob "Lefty" Grove, the Boston Red Sox's costly twirler, cut loose with his port-side arm today and made Al Schacht, new comedian-coach, jump with joy.

According to Schacht, Grove showed more speed during today's warm-up than he did at any time last season.

"That proves it," said Schacht to Manager Joe Cronin. "His arm must be right. If it wasn't, those pitches he threw would have torn it off."

Never a particularly sociable person, especially since his arm started bothering him, Grove is now the life of the Red Sox camp.

Olive Branch Is Sent Ruth By Dizzy

Says He Didn't Mean to Hurt Bambino: Meant Raps for League.

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

BRADENTON, Fla., March 6.—There won't be any feud this year between the National League's two most colorful and commanding personalities.

I have the solemn word of Jerome Herman (Dizzy) Dean that he holds nothing but admiration and the highest respect for George Herman (Babe) Ruth. In fact, Dizzy asked me today to carry the olive branch back to the Babe at St. Petersburg and tell the veteran slugger that he (Dizzy) will do the best he can to strike him out when they meet in an exhibition game on March 20.

Got Him Wrong.

"Let's get this all straightened out now," said the elder of the celebrated Dean brothers as we sat in the clubhouse of the world champion Cardinals' training camp. "They have been putting me on the pan for what I said about Ruth, when I first heard he was coming into the National League. Maybe I popped off sudden-like, but they got me wrong.

"I haven't got a thing against Ruth, personally. I never have had. I think he's as great a guy as there has ever been in baseball. He's my friend and he's given me some good advice. In fact, I credit him with being one of the influences that helped me make more money in baseball. If he goes good in our league this year—and I hope he does, against every club but the Cards—it will mean $5,000 more on my contract for 1936.

Hits American League.

"We will outdraw the American League all around this season, with Ruth helping to pull in the fans. I can't understand how the club owners of that league ever let the Babe get away. That's what I meant when I criticized the American League. How could they have been so shortsighted as not to give their greatest player a manager's job?

"What I said about Ruth, otherwise, was on account of my friend, Bill McKechnie. My first thought was that the Babe's coming to the Braves would cost Bill his job. I know otherwise now and I'm sorry if Ruth felt I was casting any reflection on him personally. The first chance I get I'm going to walk up to the big guy and tell him how great I think he is and how we are all pulling for him to have a good year. Yes, sir, tell the Babe for me that I'm on the square with him.

Hopes for Best.

"Just like any other tough hitter—and then hope for the best," he replied. "I won't hesitate to pass him if he comes up in a pinch. I know how he can lather that ball and even if I didn't the rest of the Cardinals are taking plenty of pains to tell me all about him."

The irrepressible Dizzy already has wagered, even money, that Ruth won't hit a home run off him in the first four times at bat—passes excluded. Branch Rickey, vice president of the world champions, bets the Babe won't hit for the circuit off the elder Dean all season, but Dizzy says "He's a cinch to lose that bet."

What about the coming season?

"Well, we"—meaning Paul and Dizzy—"ought to win at least 40 games," he said. "That's conservative, but I know I'll be lucky to get anywhere near 30 wins again. I'll need the breaks to do that. But the rest of the club is stronger. Hallahan, Walker and Malone will win a flock of games and we ought to win the pennant by at least seven games."

Dizzy Develops Cold And Grouch

Bradenton, Fla., March 6 (AP).—Jerome Herman (Dizzy) Dean, the great man of baseball, was indisposed today. But other big news from the St. Louis Cardinal camp concerned Brother Paul's statement that he was in fine condition.

Dizzy complained of a cold and a grouch, so Manager Frankie Frisch consented for him to absent himself from part of today's practice. Paul, the other of the two star Red Bird pitchers, announced he was in better condition than at the close of the 1934 season.

Paul confessed that with the healing of a bothersome injury to an ankle he can outrun Dizzy and expects to outbat him by at least 50 points.

Florida East Coast Golf Marked by Lone Upset

St. Augustine, Fla., March 6 (AP).—One minor upset robbed the favorites of a clean sweep today as match play began in the Florida East Coast women's golf championship tournament.

While such stars as Maureen Orcutt, Marian Miley and Jean Bauer were advancing, Frances Owen, of Jacksonville, Fla., listed as a title threat, dropped a 4-and-3 decision to Mrs. J. S. Fuller, of St. Augustine.

Miss Orcutt, entered from Englewood, N. J., had little trouble disposing of Elizabeth Wing, of Evanston, Ill., 6 and 4.

No Foreign Invasion For Indoor Net Play

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 6.—For the first time in five years the men's national indoor tennis championships will be purely domestic without even the irrepressible Jean Borotra of France taking another shot at the title which he has won four times in the past.

While United States Lawn Tennis Association officials seeded eight players today for the thirty-sixth annual tournament, which starts Saturday, they lamented the absence of an entry for Borotra.

"Without Borotra, or some other star of equal brilliance and popularity, the tournament lacks much of its attractiveness both for spectators and American players," said one official. "If Borotra was entered, you can bet that Sidney Wood, Clifford Sutter, Frankie Parker and others of the 'first ten' would be in there to thwart another coup by the Frenchman."

Only one member of the "first ten" is entered in this year's championship, and the association didn't accord him the top-seeded position, that honor going to Gregory S. Mangin, the former Newark (N. J.) "bulldog" and now a resident of New York.

Mangin, winner of the indoor crown in 1932 and 1933 and ranked thirteenth nationally after disastrous indoor and outdoor seasons last year, is followed by Berkeley Bell, erstwhile Texas firebrand, who at No. 7 is the lowest nationally ranked player in the tournament.

There are six other seeded performers—J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J.; Eugene McCauliff, of Yonkers; Frank Bowden, Dr. Lawrence Kurzrox, E. E. Jenkins, jr., and Herbert Bowman, all of New York, in that order—but the tournament appears to be a two-man affair featuring Mangin and Bell.

Bell heads the upper bracket of 32, while Mangin tops the lower bracket of 32. Mangin's is the tougher half, with Bowden, upsetter of Borotra last year; the globe-trotting Hall and the veteran Bowman—all nationally ranked—in his division. Dr. McCauliff appears the only serious opposition in Bell's path to the final.

New Way to Fish! Catches 'Em in Air

By the United Press.

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., March 6.—Heidie Burt, of Washington, former Department of Agriculture expert, has introduced "high and dry" fishing to southern Florida.

While casting from a cant, Burt's line swung over a limb and the hook hung 14 inches above the water. A black bass leaped above the water a dozen times at the dangling minnow. Finally, the hook snared the fish by the tail and held it above the water until Burt removed it.

Witnesses of his "fish story" are his fishing companions, Roe Fulkerson, editor of Kiwanis International Magazine, and Bill Chantlan, of the Federal Trade Commission, both of Washington.

Tolan in Double Win In Australian Sprints

Melbourne, March 6 (U.P.).—Eddie Tolan, of Michigan, won the first two events of the world's sprinting championship today. He captured the 75-yard dash in the fast time of 0:07.5, and the 100-yard event in 0:90.12-16. In each case he nosed out the defending champion, Austin Robertson, of Australia.

The remaining events are at 130 yards and 220 yards.

McLarnin Is Offered $25,000 for Battle

Vancouver, B. C., March 6 (AP).—A cable message to the Vancouver Province today said the National Sporting Club of Australia has offered $25,000 to Jimmy McLarnin, world welterweight champion, to fight "Slugger" Carrol, Australian welter champ, in Sydney, N. S. W.

Hopkins Five Is Routed by Maryland

Old Liners, Led by Waters, Run Up 52-25 Score on Old Rivals.

THE University of Maryland dribblers took a new lease on life and took Johns Hopkins in the same motion last night at College Park, where the Terps defeated the Blue Jays for the second time this season, 52 to 25.

It was a rather loosely played game, but not until Maryland had raced so far ahead of its guest to preclude all possibility of a Hopkins victory.

The Terps ground out points like so much sausage meat, with Al Waters acting as chief butcher. Their plays worked to a perfection, too, as if they were serving notice on Georgetown that Monday's battle will be all the name it implies.

Hopkins Drops Back.

Hopkins, after finishing second in the first half, 13 to 23, dropped back steadily as the last half wore away and never threatened. All but a few of the Blue Jays' points were scored on prodigious shots from midcourt.

Bernie Buscher, Maryland's ace forward, returned to the line-up after an absence of several weeks with one leg boarded up to protect an injury. It did not affect his work, however.

Boston Red Sox Sent Porter to Syracuse

Boston, March 6 (AP).—General Manager Eddie Collins today announced that the Boston Red Sox had sent Dick Porter, outfielder, to the Syracuse International League Club.

Porter played 80 games for the Sox last season, batting for .302, after coming from Cleveland, where he hit .227 in 13 games. Porter spent eight seasons in the International, with Baltimore, before joining the Indians in 1929.

Eastern Faces Charlotte; Bethesda to Oppose Augusta Team.

By John R. Vosburgh.

THE basket ball forces of Eastern turned their steps southward last night with an acquisitive eye on the championship of the Washington and Lee interscholastic basket ball tournament in which they begin play tonight at Lexington, Va.

Bethesda-Chevy Chase High, the only other school from the Washington area invited to take part in the 1935 tournament, left yesterday afternoon by automobile. Eight players also made up the contingent of the Montgomery County champions, accompanied by Coach Anthony Kupka, Manager Richard Bishop and Victor Cooney, a school instructor.

Members of Teams.

Heading Eastern's interhigh champions were Capt. Lavelle (Dope) Dean, phenomenal scorer of the troupe; Gay Edelen, Fred Scheible, Buddy Shaner, Chick Hollidge, Bill Buckoltz, Chick Colley and Ed Miller. Bearing the colors of Bethesda-Chevy Chase were Capt. Ed Johnson, Moyer Fulks, Tom Finlayson, Woodrow Putnam, Tom Lodge, Robert Harris, Frank Lozupone, and Lynwood Jones.

Booked to play Charlotte (N. C.) High in the first round at 8 o'clock tonight, the Easterners looked upon the result of the draw, throwing them against the team which kept them from the championship in the final round last year, as a good omen. Charlotte, though having a less impressive record this year than in 1934, has picked up the rep-

Capital Youth To Replace Schulte

Kuhel's Ankle Mended, Drill Proves; Harris to Use Peticolas.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., March 6.—Clark Griffith is anticipating the fulfillment of a hope now five years old. The object of his enthusiasm is Jake Powell, the reformed Washington sandlotter, who is establishing himself solidly in the esteem of both the Nats' owner and Manager Bucky Harris.

Powell has ripened into a sweet prospect for an outfield berth with the Nats after Griffith had once despaired of his ability to make the majors. But, in the face of Powell's deficiencies, the Nats' owner has, by various manipulations of his farm system, retained title to Powell since 1931 when he was first plucked from the Washington sandlots.

If any rookie is to intrude himself into the Nats' regular line-up this season, both Griffith and Harris believe it will be Powell. Down here in Biloxi they mention his name with a kind of reverence rarely bestowed on a rookie. It is a tribute to his long-delayed but sensational development at Albany.

Powell first struck Griffith's fancy the day the Nats' owner was prevailed upon by friends of the lad to scout him at a sandlot game in Takoma Park. Powell, his friends told Griffith with all the exuberance of amateur scouts, was a budding Goose Goslin, a slugger, and every bit as fast.

Looked Like Goslin.

It was the kind of a recommendation best calculated to capture Griffith's interest. No player, not even Walter Johnson, ever ranked as high in Griffith's esteem as the slugging Goose, who finally developed into a capable outfielder. Griffith was struck immediately by Powell's resemblance to Goslin's batting style, and even to the peculiar waddle that marked the Goose's gait.

The Nats' owner immediately dubbed Powell "Little Goose," and keen was his disappointment when the Takoma Park lad failed to earn a regular berth with Chattanooga. Finally, after minor league trials, Griffith was forced to put him on the draft list, but was fortunate when no club claimed him. After a season with Dayton, Albany claimed him and, by virtue of his working agreement with the Albany club, Griffith regained title to him.

Griffith's faith in Powell was justified last season when, with a batting average of .356, the Takoma Park boy became the International League's second leading hitter.

Sought by Many Clubs.

The Cubs, Pirates and Giants soon manifested great interest in Powell and sought to buy him. Manager Bill Terry sent Adolph Luque, veteran pitcher, to Albany to scout Outfielder Freddy Sington. Luque reported back to Terry:

"You don't want Sington, you want Powell. He's the star on the club."

Terry's efforts to buy Powell from Albany were futile, of course, in the face of the Nats' claim on him.

"Little Goose" will displace Fred Schulte in center field for the Nats this season barring a startling re-

Chancing Triumphs in Hialeah Feature to Pay $24.60 Mutuel

New Deal 2d, Headed for Honors

Sabula Finishes Third; Bloodroot Is Victor in Fourth Race.

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., March 6. Running in form that was in marked contrast to his dull exhibition in the Jockey Club Handicap, in which he was distanced, George P. Odom's Chancing showed admirable speed and gameness to win the featured Royal Poinciana Handicap of 1 mile here this afternoon. The 4-year-old son of Chance Play, winner of three straight here prior to his last dismal effort, led all the way and won by a head to pay $24.60.

The Araho Stable's New Deal, third in the Jockey Club Handicap, was a game second, while giving the winner many pounds, as he did in their last meeting. Fred Alger, jr.'s Sabula lost the place by four lengths. The time was 1:37 2-5.

Under the feathery impost of 105 pounds, Chancing first ran the speedy Speedmore into submission. New Deal, kept close up in the early running, began an ominous challenge around the last bend and drew up to almost even terms with the ultimate winner. Mack Winters kept Chancing going in a spirited drive. Sabula just lasted to save third money from Good Harvest, which never could get up.

Beth Bon Victorious.

Fourteen maiden two-year-old fillies cavorted down the three-furlong chute in today's opener, with Beth Bon, an improving miss, earning top honors by a length and a half. Field horses accounted for second and third positions, Gay Minetta lasting to head the fast finishing Balaath. The field group, incidentally, ruled favorite. Flopsie, also well played, was fourth. Beth Bon paid $9.20.

Guapito, South American 6-year-old, won the graded handicap Class C for his first success in North America, under the guidance of the Chilean jockey, "Mike" Villena. The son of Tiny—Guapa, owned by C. W. Muller, a German who is vice president of Panama, began slowly but picked up the leaders in the stretch and moved clear to score easily at odds of 5-to-1. He ran the mile and a furlong in 1:51. War Pledge tired in the final furlong, but lasted to head Kindacorn for the place.

Harlow and Fish To Speak at C. U.

Second Annual Banquet Is Scheduled May 1.

Catholic University's second annual athletic banquet will have a decided Harvard accent, it was disclosed last night, when Arthur J. Bergman, director of athletics, announced that Dick Harlow, new Crimson football coach, and Representative Hamilton Fish, jr., of New York, will be guest speakers for the occasion.

Bergman's announcement followed a message from Harlow that spring practice at Harvard—which he had feared would prevent him from accepting the invitation—will be concluded several weeks before May 1, the date of the gathering.

Mr. Fish, a former Harvard star, has long been interested in sports in general and the welfare of his alma mater in particular, and was instrumental in obtaining Harlow from Western Maryland. Only recently he gave a luncheon in Harlow's honor, which signalized the inauguration of a new deal in football at Cambridge.

O'Mahoney Trains For Local Battle

Washington rassle fans were assured a glimpse of Dan O'Mahoney yesterday when the Irish mat sensation commenced training in Boston for his match with Fred Grobmier at the Auditorium next Thursday.

The bout, originally scheduled for tonight, was postponed by Promoter Joe Turner because of a leg injury sustained by the Irishman in a recent match. Tickets already purchased will be honored at the gate without further ado. Those wishing to cancel reservations should contact Promoter Turner at the Annapolis Hotel.

West Virginia Senate Votes Race Bill

Would Reduce State Share of Mutuel Receipts to 1½ Per Cent.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., March 6.—The West Virginia Senate passed the race track bill yesterday afternoon providing for a commission of three members to supervise and control horse racing in the State. The bill was then sent to the House.

The bill was passed only after it had been amended to provide for a fee of $500 daily on tracks of 1 mile or more, and $250 daily on tracks of ½ mile or less. The bill also required the payment of 1½ per cent of the pool of pari-mutuel machines, the total fees not to exceed 10 per cent of the entire pool.

J. B. McLaughlin, State secretary of agriculture, has had charge of the racing laws for the last two years and the State has been collecting 3 per cent on all mutuel receipts.

A commission of three men, appointed by the Governor to serve four-year terms, will be given the authority to remove any race track official, hold hearings, and provide penalties for making false statements during hearings.

The bill was introduced by Senator Milton O. Rouss. Representatives of the Charles Town Jockey Club, operators of the lone horse race track in West Virginia, appeared before the Senate committee and asked for the reduction of the 3 per cent mutuel tax.

Sanico Pin League Plans for Banquet

John R. Fagan has been named to head a committee of five to plan for the Sanico Bowlers Banquet on April 29. Other members on the committee are Messrs. Mcfall, W. LaBille, Pratt and J. A. Anderson.

The Sanico League will enter three teams in the National Duckpin Tournament. Teams are to be picked from the rank by Messrs. Fagan, Hazelton and Pratt.

Jewish Center Trims Ft. Washington in A. A. U. Tourney, 32-25

Rinaldi's and Twin Oaks Also Win

DISPLAYING a smooth passing machine and two clever shooters in Milt Genderson and Jack Fraeman, both guards, Jewish Community Center's unlimited team made an auspicious debut in the District A. A. U. basket ball tournament under the sponsorship of The Washington Post last night at Tech High gym.

Jim McNammara's cagers eliminated a hard-working Fort Washington quintet, 32 to 25, in the feature of a triple-header program to advance to the second round.

Genderaon Is Star.

Genderaon easily was the outstanding player on the floor. Benefiting by the mellowing experience of last season's tournament, the tall, blond guard sifted through the Soldiers' defense almost at will to chalk up five field goals. He missed at least seven other snowbirds, but in addition to his fine offensive work he played a bang-up game on the defense.

Fraeman, formerly of City College of New York, worked beautifully with Genderson, and the two played havoc with the Fort Washington team.

The rivals were tied at 2-all after five minutes, and with ten gone, the Center boys led, 8-6. At the turn J. C. C. had protected its lead to the extent of a 13-8 count.

Boost Lead to 17-8.

The Hebrew tossers went 17-8 shortly after play resumed, and hung on to their big lead until the last three minutes of play when Pudgett, center, of Fort Washington, returned to the line-up and scored two goals to bring the Soldiers within four points of their rivals. Here Genderson and Fraeman scored goals to quell the uprising. West and Bird were the Fort Washington stars.

Rinaldi showed too much shooting power for the little Eagles, and was leading, 12 to 2, at one time. At the half, Rinaldi was ahead, 18 to 6.

Jim Money, the towering former Trinity star, led the Rinaldi attack with 11 points, while O. Brienza got 8. Cassell, with 9 points, featured for the Eagles.

Twin Oaks led Ehrlich, 15 to 13, at the half, and held its adversaries to 5 points in the closing period, so impregnable was its defense. Hunter, with -0 points, Cole with 8, featured for the Twin Oaks, while Lassise did Trojan duty for Ehrlich.

Schmeling Fights Hamas on Sunday

couldn't tag them. Hamas might have given Baer trouble because he can box and roll with a punch and can spar your head off on the end of his left arm.

Hamas' return match with Schmeling in Germany might be regarded as something of a sporting gesture, but there is no sportsmanship in professional boxing and the sportsman is always the sucker. The set-up for Hamas looks bad. He'll have to knock him out to win. I would imagine. I wish I could see that fight. Hamburg is a nice town, too. There will be an important innovation at this fight. Herr Direktor Yacobs will be smoking his usual cigar, only he will have a stout string tied to it. This in case he swallows it.

There is some error, I would say, in billing Impelletierre and Carnera as cup contenders, because neither is championship material. It were better billed as something done for a laugh, which is not a bad attraction, either. There is nothing much funnier than the spectacle of two large gentlemen, weighing around 200 pounds, and only three breadths away from fear—hysteria—trying to hit each other without getting hit back.

Like all overgrown boys, Ray is a pleasant, mild-mannered fellow with no particular urge for assault and battery. Carnera's ring rancor is purely synthetic, too, although he has some greater flair for combat than Impelletierre has, but neither of them is instinctively savage or has an instinctive affection for a punch on the nose. They are both game enough under fire, but I imagine each would prefer to fight a smaller man than he is going to meet on the 15th. I know I would.

Seven Former Professional Baseball Stars And Many Ex-Collegians Dot Congress' List

By Dillon Graham.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

WITH seven former professional players and a flock of former college stars, this Congress can offer an all-star baseball team that would have given many league clubs a battle some years ago.

The coming of spring and the diamond season finds some of the legislators regaling their colleagues with stories of their playing days as they loll around the cloakrooms before Congress convenes.

On the basis of this gossiping, a congressional team could be selected from the House which would line up like this:

Ray Cannon pitched several seasons in the Wisconsin-Illinois professional league and went South to training camps five times with the Chicago Cubs, Cincinnati Reds and Philadelphia Nationals. Martin Brennan was varsity backstop at Illinois Wesleyan College.

James Mead played with several professional teams, including Niagara, of the old International League, while Edward Kelly also spent several seasons in professional ball, winding up with Toledo in the American Association.

Fred Hartley did most of his playing on semipro teams in New Jersey, and gained fame on Capitol Hill by hitting the only home run of the last congressional game here. Bill Granfield was Notre Dame's baseball captain before he was signed by the Cincinnati Reds.

An all-professional outfield includes Scott Lucas, who played with Peoria and Bloomington in the Three-Eye League; James Richards, who played in the South Atlantic League, and Tom McMillan, who for two seasons led the South Atlantic League at bat and in stolen bases.

The reserves are strong enough to add much power to this varsity team. For pitchers there are Richard Kleberg (Texas), who was on the Texas U. squad; Millard Caldwell (Florida), who starred at the Universities of Mississippi and Virginia, and Emmet O'Neal (Kentucky), who was Centre College captain, rejected an offer by the New York Giants and played for a while in Kentucky professional circles.

The reserve first baseman could be Jennings Randolph (West Virginia), of Salem College, known as the only five-letter athlete in Congress, while Usher Burdick (North Dakota) fits into the second base slot he played for Minnesota U. Josh Lee (Oklahoma), who played at Oklahoma Baptist U., and Joe Casey (Massachusetts), who did some semipro playing after his school days at Boston College, would round out the infield.

For fly-chasers there are Tom O'Malley (Wisconsin), a heavy hitter for Loyola of Chicago; W. J. Sears (Florida), who ranged the garden for Mercer University; John Houston (Kansas), who played at Fairmont College; Richard Wigglesworth (Massachusetts), a former Yale centerfielder, James Shanley (Connecticut), another Yale varsity man, and George Stewart (Delaware), a first stringer at Delaware U.

Ritchie Coliseum's Use Without Charge Asked

Annapolis, Md., March 6 (AP).—Athletic organizations of Prince Georges County would be enabled to use Ritchie Coliseum, College Park, for wrestling or boxing without charge under a bill placed in the House today by Delegate John S. White (Democrat), Prince Georges.

The athletic director of the University of Maryland would be directed to permit organizations of the county to use the gymnasium on written request.

Clarksburg, Fairmont May Join New League

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., March 6.—Plans are being considered by baseball fans and business men of Clarksburg and Fairmont for taking franchises in the new Psnnsylvania-West Virginia Baseball League being organized by Richard Guy, of Pittsburgh, former president of the Middle Atlantic League and former Pittsburgh newspaperman. Guy has just contacted interested persons in both cities.

Wheeling has planned to take a franchise and other members so far listed are Uniontown, Waynesburg, Bridgeville and Dormont, Pa., while another city in northern West Virginia or southern Pennsylvania will be included.

Arlington A. C. Nine To Meet Tomorrow

Members of the Arlington Athletic Club will meet tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in the old Columbia School, to discuss plans for the approaching baseball season. All members and candidates for the team are requested to attend.

J. B. Lowell, president of the club, invites queries concerning it. He can be reached at Clarendon 820-W-2. A manager will be elected at tomorrow night's meeting.

Colored Tourney to Open.

Clarksburg, W. Va., March 6.—Plans have been completed for the annual State section basket ball tournament for colored high schools of northern West Virginia tomorrow and Friday at the Kelly Miller High School gymnasium in this city.

Ruth to Play First In Drill of Braves

By the Associated Press.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6. Babe Ruth and Rabbit Maranville, the Boston Braves' turnstile stars, settled down to routine practice today and Manager Bill McKechnie had his first chance to prime his squad for the week-end exhibition games with Cincinnati at Tampa.

Whether the home run slugger will be ready for these contests probably will be determined tomorrow when he holds down first base in a practice tilt.

Big Frank Hogan was struck on the head by one of Bobby Brown's offerings during batting practice and suffered a concussion that will keep him idle for a week.

'Y. W.' Business Girls Oppose Baltimoreans

The Business Girls of the Y. W. C. A. will meet the Baltimore Sports Club at 4 p. m. Saturday in the Y. W. C. A. gym, Seventeenth and K streets.

The local girls won the first game played in Baltimore. The star forward from Washington is Lucille Clifton, and the home team looks to her to score most of its points.

New Golf Pro Named By Cumberland Club

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, March 6.—Edward J. Morgan, of Swampscott, Mass., has been appointed as the new professional golfer and instructor at the Cumberland Country Club, by the board of directors, succeeding Joe Fungy, whose contract expired. Morgan, who is 28 years old, with several years' experience as professional at New England clubs, was selected from a dozen applicants.

Morgan is the sixth professional golfer to take over the reins since the country club was founded here. Jimmy Beveridge, now of Tome School, Port Deposit, Md., was the first, followed by Frank Goss and Henry Johnson, who are now in Florida; Stanley Currie, of Pittsburgh, and Joseph Fungy, of Clarksburg.

Thurmont Girls Win.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Thurmont, Md., March 6.—Thurmont girls won the northern division pennant by defeating Walkersville, 14 to 9. Counted out of the race three weeks ago, Thurmont launched a winning streak and fought its way to the top. Thurmont will meet Frederick, pennant winners of the southern division, for the championship of the county on Friday.

Exams Reduce Plans of Va. For Meet

Only 9 or 10 Trackmen to Vie in Conference Competition.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

UNIVERSITY, Va., March 6.—Because the late date on which the Southern Conference indoor track meet is scheduled comes so close to term examinations, the University of Virginia is planning to enter only nine or ten picked men in the competition this week-end at the University of North Carolina.

Archie Hahn, Cavalier track coach, has been tutoring a large squad of runners and field men for several weeks. But winter exams start just four days after the Chapel Hill meet, and some of the best men on the squad don't want to take a chance of failing academic work because of several days' absence from the university.

Grover Everett, Virginia captain and conference hurdle champion indoors and out, is a crack student who believes he can compete in the indoor games and still pass his work. The Cavalier team leader holds the 70-yard high-hurdle record and shares the 70-yard low-hurdle mark with Jim Brownlee, former Duke star.

Dodson Entered.

Griff Dodson, sprinter and broad jumper, won't be taking any chance with his classwork when he goes to Carolina. Dodson last fall won the coveted certificate of intermediate honors for outstanding scholastic performance during his first two sessions in the university.

Others who are expected to compete are Bob St. John, half miler; Bill Banta, miler; Bill Armstrong, pole vaulter; Cullen Wilkin and Newman Harris, high jumpers, and possibly Leonard Trell, shot putter.

Last year Virginia missed winning the indoor title by one point and a fraction because some men did not want to take time from their work, and the same thing may happen again this winter.

Duke Five Primed For Navy Contest

Plans to Keep Eyes on Borries and Dornin.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Durham, N. C., March 6.—The "covering" of Buzz Borries and R. E. Dornin, Navy's two basket ball celebrities, is the task facing Duke University's cagers when the Middies invade Duke gym Friday night for a post-season game with the Blue Devils.

In order to stay in the game, the boys of Eddie Cameron must stop the scoring of those two stars. Many teams this season have put all emphasis on stopping Borries, with the result that Dornin was left to shoot about as he liked and he has been responsible for many of Navy's points.

The Middies come here—their first trip into this section of the country—with one of the finest records in Eastern circles—11 victories in 14 games this season. They have lost only to North Carolina's Southern Conference champs, N. Y. U. and Army.

Horse Show Dates Are Set in Virginia

National Capital and Other Events Announced.

Other shows not listed will be arranged later.

Central Faces Beall In Title Game Tonight

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 6.—Miss Tiny Calvin has been selected by the Playground Athletic League of Baltimore to referee the game between the girls' teams of Central High School, of Lonaconing, and Beall High School, of Frostburg, at Campobello tomorow night, to decide the championship of the Western Maryland Interscholastic League.

Miss Calvin is a Maryland board official.

Traffic Lights Planned For Indianapolis Race

By the United Press.

CHICAGO, March 6.—Automobile racing, the sport of thrills, spills, fence crashing and double somersaults in mid-air, has come to the point where even traffic cops may not know it from the relative tranquillity of a first-class boulevard.

For the first time in the history of automobile racing, drivers gyrating around the Indianapolis Speedway next May 30 at speeds of from 95 to 105 miles an hour will be guided by stop and go lights.

"Why not?" he said. "It's a much safer system than the hand-manipulated flags and at least there will be a few less protests."

Copps referred to a protest last year when Maurie Rose, who finished second to Wild Bill Cummings, complained that Cummings had improved his position while spurting under a caution flag. Cummings in answer said that it required some time for the flag signals to be relayed around the track and that he slowed down immediately upon observing them. The rules committee upheld this point.

This was the cue for Copps and his advisers to dig up a protest-proof system of signaling.

Under the former system, drivers learned of trouble ahead from flaggers stationed at various points on the track who were relayed information by field telephone. The relays sometimes were slow and it opened the way for preventable crashes.

Track rules provide that drivers running under a caution signal must slow down and can not improve their positions under penalty of disqualification. Occasionally drivers and mechanics were too busy worrying about catching up with the next fellow to bother much about caution flags, and hence the squawks.

But with the new electric light system, it will be simply a matter of pressing a button.

70 Candidates In Grid Drill At V. M. I.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

LEXINGTON, Va., March 6.—Now that the basket ball, boxing and wrestling seasons have closed, V. M. I. athletes have turned to spring football, track and baseball. Seventy football candidates have reported to Coaches Bill Raftery and Ed Hess, 25 track and field men are working under Coach Son Read, and another 25 men are preparing for the baseball season under Coach Snail Caldwell, pinch hitting for Raftery during the football practice period.

After a month of grid work which will include regular practice games, many candidates will be added to the varsity and freshman diamond and track squads.

Turn to Other Sports.

Members of V. M. I.'s Southern Conference championship wrestling squad also are turning to other sports, but Capt. Ward Currence, John Burges., Archie Witt and Joe Sherrard probably will resume practice next week for the N. C. A. A. championships to be held at Lehigh University on March 22 and 23.

Capt. Temple Ryland, shot putter; Hansell Pasco, high jumper, and Bob Mathews, fre man sprinter, are included in the small squad that will represent V. M. I. at the Southern Conference indoor track meet at Chapel Hill this week. Gwynne Tayloe, last year's sprinting ace, is entered, but may not compete on account of an ankle injury.

Trials Are Slated For Puppies Today

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 6.—Approximately 30 entries are expected for the Rappahannock Field Trial Association's spring puppy trials which will be run tomorrow at Lavue, estate of Herman O. Swanson, 7 miles from this city.

Charles B. Cooke, of Mount Holly, Va., and Irvin A. Hynes, of Baltimore, will judge the event.

Following is a partial list of entries:

Houghton Gets 64 Card at Kenwood

By Dave Herman.

ALONG about this time every year, when a young man's fancy softly turns to thoughts of golf, Al Houghton, of Kenwood, blooms forth with something in the way of a high-powered score.

In 1932 Houghton raked his course with a running fire of pars and birdies for a 63, 8 under par. Came 1933 and Houghton burned up Kenwood in 64 blows. Last year he reached the zenith of his scoring power by shooting an incredible 61 over Washington Golf and Country Club's tricky layout—a 61 that may never be equaled.

Yesterday was Houghton's day again. He scored a 64 at Kenwood, lipping the cup on the home hole for a birdie that would have tied his all-time record for the course. His was a brace of 32s that included birdies on the fifth, sixth, ninth, tenth, fifteenth and seventeenth, and an eagle 3 on the 465-yard twelfth.

Teams With Cunningham.

Houghton teamed with Walter (Red) Cunningham, stocky Burning Tree pro, to defeat Al Tredor, Manor, and Mel Shorey, East Potomac, 5 and 4. Cunningham scored a 70, Treder 71 and Shorey 75. Between them they had 11 birdies and a best ball of 60.

The Kenwood pro didn't 3-putt a single green, wasn't in a single trap. He would have matched his own mark had he not missed his drive and taken a 6 on the long thirteenth hole. He didn't do any marvelous putting, since he used up 30 putts for the round. He played from the back tees. All greens were permanent.

His card with par:

Out—
Par.....	4	4	4	4	5	3	4	3	4	—35
Houghton	4	4	4	4	4	2	4	3	3	—32
In—
Par.....	3	4	5	5	4	4	4	3	4	—36—71
Houghton	2	4	3	6	4	3	4	2	4	—32—64

Bill Harvey, the tall Manor Club golfer, cut loose with one of his prodigious tee shots yesterday on the 270-yard seventh hole of the inside nine at his home course, and the ball finished 8 feet from the pin. Bill tapped it in for an eagle deuce.

Seeking a comeback after an up-and-down 1934 season, Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, former District champion, played for the first time this year yesterday at Indian Spring. She toured the first nine with Mrs. L. T. Powers and Mrs. J. Franklin Gross. Also out for the first time was Tommy Belshe, former Indian Spring champion, who scored in the high 70s.

Eddie Bean, Beaver Dam champion, missed a few putts yesterday at Beaver Dam and missed leveling par for his course. He scored a 35-38—73. Bill Henderson, who practiced in his attic all winter, caused a surprise by shooting a 78—his best.

Soccer Teams' Consolations To Open

INTRODUCED this season for the four teams in the lower bracket of the Recreation Soccer League, the consolation tournament which begins Sunday aroused considerable interest and as much attention is being paid it by the competing teams as the fight for the league title between Sun Radio and Italian A. C.

The draw for the first round threw Virginia Avenue against Sherwood and Occoquan against Miller Furniture. In the regular league contests between these contenders, Viginia Avenue defeated Sherwood, 2-1, while Occoquan beat Miller Furniture by the same score.

Need Draw to Win.

What may prove to be the final league game of the season is that which brings Sun Radio and Italian A. C. together in Sunday's feature game on No. 2 Monument field at 2:30 p. m. The radiomen won the first-half series and need only to draw Sunday to take the league championship. On the other hand, should the Italians prove victorious it will be necessary to play a deciding game.

In lieu of sectional cup-ties this season, the Southeastern Soccer Association plans to revive the international matches and a meeting of team managers will be held in the office of the Municipal Playground Department at 5 p. m. tomorrow to arrange details. The opening round will be played on March 17 or 24, with the final game on the following Sunday.

Middletown Subdues Emmitsburg for Title

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., March 6.—Middletown, pennant winner of the Southern division, defeated Emmitsburg, champion of the Northern division of the County High School League, 31 to 18, for the county title. The victory enables Middletown to represent Frederick County in the State-wide County High School League P. A. L. tournament next week.

Program of 13 Events Set at V. P. I. Tonight

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Blacksburg, Va., March 6.—A water carnival of ten events will feature the annual physical education demonstration in the War Memorial at Virginia Tech tomorrow. Basket ball, bowling and an "Intramural Ball," also are listed on an attractive program announced today by Prof. M. B. Blair, director.

The program, to begin at 7 p. m., will last until 11:30, and is expected to attract capacity crowds to the gymnasium and the natatorium of War Memorial Hall.

According to Mike Kelley, who coached last year's Eastern team at the tournament, Eastern should have won by 15 points, and, with the Lincoln Parkers about on a par with the team of 1934, the general impression follows that Eastern should win with something to spare tonight.

Monday and Tuesday were spent in thorough, but none too strenuous, workouts. Coach Guyon has been stressing foul-shooting rather firmly since his proteges missed enough free shots in the Georgetown Freshman game, Saturday, to have won by several points. The Freshmen won, 30 to 29.

Bethesda, perennial winner of the Montgomery County title and runner-up for the Metropolitan championship, faces a stumbling block in the first round in the Augusta Military Academy. The game is slated for 4:30 p. m. today.

Finlayson, who suffered a severe face laceration in the game with Alexandria in the Metropolitan tournament two weeks ago, is back in the regular line-up. Loss of the husky guard is felt to have affected the showing of the Marylanders in the final with Eastern when they lost by over 20 points and his return to action boosts the Bethesda outlook substantially.

Raleigh and Massanutten Military Academy will play the first game of the tournament at 1:30, while High Poin will meet Staunton Military Academy at 3:30.

South Carolina's entry, Spartanburg High, will face the Virginia Presbyterian School of Danville at 7 o'clock; Georgia's hope, Tech High of Atlanta, will play Greenbrier Military of West Virginia at 2:30. Two Virginia high schools, Jefferson and Roanoke and John Marshall of Richmond, will play Tarheel quintets. Jefferson meeting Asheville School For Boys at 10 p. m. and the Richmonders taking on Asheville High in the game before that.

June Fight With Baer, Duffy's New Goal for Carnera

'I've Changed My Style,' Manager Declares, for Ex-Champ.

By the United Press.

ORANGEBURG, N. Y., March 6.—Primo Carnera doesn't know it yet—but on the night of March 15 he is going to step into Ray Impellettiere and knock him kicking with a right hand bash over the heart.

After that the former world heavyweight champion will move through the outstanding contenders in stride, then climb back into the ring with Max Baer under a June moon and probably regain the title he lost last year.

Broadway Bill Duffy took a hitch in his British tweeds today, contemplated a big red sun apparently sitting on top of a hill hard by Gus Wilson's training camp, and said he thought out the above procedure for Carnera.

Duffy then revealed that the half of Carnera's contract which he owns gives him the right to do Carnera's thinking and if anyone doubted that he had done all right as Carnera's brain he needed only to point to Carnera's record, the record of an easy-going peasant strong man who couldn't and can't fight anywhere near in proportion to his size, yet who made a fortune and won a title.

"So I think I will be able to knock out Impellettiere," the owner of rights to think for Carnera said for himself and the other half jointly, "and then I want the contenders lined up a few days apart, with Baer on the end."

Carnera finds this arrangement, which takes the load off his own brain, ideal, and he has the confidence in Duffy of a big collie trailing a kindly master.

Just how much bearing Duffy's absence from Carnera's corner might have had on him in the Baer fight, never will be known, unless perhaps they meet again and Carnera wins, as Duffy believes he would. But it will be recalled that Carnera wanted the judge to let Duffy out of jail to second him.

Carnera put on display a punching which veteran camp followers said he has never shown before. Duffy attributes this to a slight overhauling of his boxing style.

"You see," Duffy explained, getting technical, "I drop that right hand in there now over the heart—not under the heart, and there is no turning of the body. That adds power at a knockout spot."

Duffy—assisted by Carnera—all but tore loose the ribs and head of a black sparring partner named Tiger Lou Flowers. He did most of the heavy punching as well against

Carnera will weigh about 260 for Duffy's fight with the Imp, the first man he has met who is his size.

What Carnera will do when the Imp, 6 feet 7½ and weighing just over 260, throws five folded fingers at him on a level with his chin, will make another interesting chapter—regardless of the outcome—in an interesting career.

Grains Decline Following Rise; Wheat Nervous

Cotton Rally Collapses and Prices Close at Lower Levels.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 6.—Hasty ideas that President Roosevelt was about to devalue the dollar anew ran grain markets skyward today, but denials later tumbled prices lower than before. When trading ended for the day, wheat had sold at the lowest level since February 7 and corn since November 10. Both in wheat and corn, wild fluctuations up and down exceeded 3 cents a bushel, with last prices at almost the day's bottom.

Wheat closed nervous, ¾ to 1⅛ under yesterday's finish; May, 95 to 95⅛; corn, ⅜ to 1⅛ off; May, 81⅛ to ¾; oats, unchanged to ¾ down, and provisions showing 10 to 20 cents decline.

A rush of buying overwhelmed the grain pits following extremely bullish views expressed by numerous traders after reports came that President Roosevelt had said today he did not think the dollar had been put back in relation to debts as far as it ought to go. Right-about-face action of traders and of values alike ensued promptly, simultaneously with official Washington statements that inflationary conclusions were altogether without warrant.

Corn and oats mainly paralleled the action of wheat. Provisions rose and fell with hog values and with grain.

Government's Silver Policy Has Radically Affected Distribution of World Stocks, But Has Not Stimulated Production of Metal.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, March 6.—The silver policy of the Administration is affecting profoundly the distribution of existing world stocks of silver, but it is not increasing the rate of output of the white metal materially.

World production of silver during 1934 is now authoritatively estimated to have aggregated a little more than 180,000,000 ounces, compared with a little less than 165,000,000 ounces in 1933. Production in 1929, on the other hand, was nearly 262,000,000 ounces.

Meanwhile, stocks of the white metal in Shanghai, latest available figures indicate, are almost 200,000,000 ounces smaller than they were six months ago. They are about 100,000,000 ounces smaller than they were at the beginning of 1933. Increased American stocks of silver have come largely out of the Orient, rather than the mines.

Silver production has not responded readily to the sharp price increase, from around 25.50 cents per ounce at the beginning of 1933 to about 58 cents at the present time, because the white metal is largely produced in conjunction with other metals which constitute the chief product of the refining process. There was a time, not so many years ago, when silver was more extensively mined, both here and abroad, for its own sake. In recent years, however, it has been produced in the United States, the second largest producer in the world, chiefly as a by-product of the smelting of lead and copper ores. The silver content of these ores is too small to justify mining for the silver content alone, so that small demand and low prices for copper and lead effectively curb silver output.

Of late years, in fact, some 80 per cent of our silver production has been thus incidental to the refining of other metals. None the less, domestic production of silver from domestic mines, which is taken by the Government at 64½ cents an ounce, is estimated to have increased from a little more than 20,000,000 ounces in 1933 to somewhat more than 26,000,000 ounces in 1934. Domestic production from foreign ores imported into this country, which is not purchased at this high price, has declined almost as much as production from domestic mines has increased.

Mexico, Peru, Canada Large Silver Producers.

In other countries, where silver mining is generally much less dependent upon the production of other metals, a moderate increase in the mine output has been registered during the past year. This is true especially of Mexico, the largest producer of silver in the world, and of Peru, another important producer. It is not true of Canada, the third largest producer of the white metal, where the white metal is a by-product of the production chiefly of lead and gold. The treatment of ores whose chief value is the silver content is more important in Canada than here.

Mexico increased her production of silver in 1934 by somewhat more than 8 per cent, while the South American output rose between 15 and 20 per cent. The increase in Canada was less than 6 per cent.

Statistics of silver stocks in various countries, while defective, indicate the magnitude of the geographical redistribution of existing stocks of silver which has resulted from the policies of the Washington Government. The United States imported more than 141,000,000 fine ounces in 1933, whereas even in past boom periods our imports never reached the 50,000,000-ounce mark in any one year. Imports in 1934 very nearly, if not quite, attained the 1933 record figure, while reported continuous buying by the Treasury or the stabilization fund gives reason to believe that our stocks held abroad also have increased substantially. Meanwhile, our silver exports, which ran around 145,000,000 ounces in 1928-29, were only about 43,000,000 in 1933, and less than half that figure in 1934.

The sluggish character of the rise in world silver production, despite the stimulus of an enormous demand from the United States, thus explains why the price of the white metal has proved so sensitive to American buying, and hence why we have attracted so much of her reserves of the metal from China. If American buying of silver persists, therefore, it will continue to be largely at the expense of China's already depleted stocks of her monetary metal. In that event, efforts to alleviate the Chinese monetary and credit crisis by new loans from Japan or the international banking consortium will prove only a temporary source of relief for China's present troubles.

Stewart-Warner Reports Profit; First Since 1931

Chicago, Ill., March 6.—The annual report of the Stewart-Warner Corporation, released today, shows the company to have operated at a profit during 1934 for the first time since 1931. Consolidated net income for 1934, after all charges, including depreciation and Federal taxes, was $571,968, equivalent to 46 cents a share on the 1,246,847 shares of common stock outstanding in the hands of the public, as compared with a loss of $1,791,060 in 1933.

The report discloses that not only has the new management of the company turned serious losses into a modest profit, but that substantial improvement in the balance sheet position has been registered.

Failures in D.C. Region Lowest For 15 Years

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Insolvencies in the Fifth Federal Reserve District, which includes Washington, during January were at the lowest point for that month since 1920, according to figures received from the Federal Reserve Bank in Richmond yesterday.

The 65 firms that failed in this district during the first month of 1935 carried total liabilities of $502,482, whereas in the corresponding month of 1934, 98 insolvencies for a total of $1,764,717 were reported.

Figures for the entire United States showed total bankruptcies had decreased to 1,184 from the January, 1934, total of 1,364. Aggregate liabilities involved during the first month of 1935 were $18,823,697, compared with an aggregate of $32,905,482 during the same month of 1934.

Insolvencies reported during January showed a 23 per cent increase over the December, 1934, figures in number of firms involved, but only a 5 per cent increase in total liabilities.

Textiles Consume More Cotton.

The textile industry in the Fifth District, which includes the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia, besides Washington, operated practically full time under code regulations in January and consumed more cotton than in January last year. The three cotton textile manufacturing States in the district used 251,186 bales of cotton in January, 45.9 per cent of national consumption totaling 546,787 bales.

North Carolina mills used 127,979 bales last month, South Carolina mills used 109,656 bales, and Virginia mills 13,551 bales, all higher figures than those for January, 1934. In December, 1934, the Fifth District used 192,436 bales, or 46.5 per cent of the United States total, and in January, 1934, the district consumed 231,555 bales, or 45.6 of the national total. January, 1935, consumption of cotton in the Fifth Districe rose 8.5 per cent above January, 1934, consumption, while national consumption rose only 7.6 per cent during the same period.

On January 19, the Department of Commerce issued a report in spindles in place, spindles active in December, total spindle hours of operation in December, and average hours of operation per spindle in place in December. On December 31, 1934, there were 30,889,484 spindles in place in the United States, North Carolina leading with 6,154,014, or 19.92 per cent of the total; South Carolina ranking second with 5,830,308 spindles, or 18.87 per cent, and Massachusetts third with 5,617,358 spindles, or 18.19 per cent.

The Fifth District as a whole had 40.91 per cent of total spindles in place in the United States at the end of December, 1934.

Motor Buses Double Income

1934 Net Increases Despite Higher Costs and Taxes.

New York, March 6.—Marked improvement in the financial condition of the motor bus industry in the United States during 1934 and an increase of about 15 per cent in employment is reported by Bus Transportation as a result of an analysis of reports submitted by 187 motor carriers representing a cross section of the entire industry.

Motor buses handled a greater volume of business than at any time since 1929 in terms of traffic handled and the net income per bus owned in 1934 was double that of 1933, despite increased operating costs and tax levies.

Bus companies in the Pacific Western States fared best, according to C. W. Stocks, editor of Bus Transportation, earning $3,148 on an investment of about $20,000 per bus owned.

Carriers operating in cities of a population between 50,000 and 100,000 had the highest average fare and did better than any other group. With a revenue of $6,298 per bus owned and an operating ratio of 72.69 per cent, this group had a net income of $319 on an investment of $7,325 per bus owned, or slightly over 4 per cent. City companies, taken as a whole, showed a net income of $90 a bus compared to an operating loss of $482 in 1933. Intercity carriers doubled net income figures of 1933 but city-and-suburban lines showed a loss.

Taxes levied on the industry in 1934 were the highest in the history of motor transportation. Intercity buses paid out in taxes an average of $1,907 per bus with long-haul buses paying an even greater amount because many States require each bus crossing its border to pay full license plates for that State irrespective of the number already carried. Local city companies paid 8.87 per cent—about 2.06 cents per bus mile.

Paterson, N. J., Advertises Successful Year's Operation

City Ended 1934 With Cash Surplus of $414,001; Mayor Hinchliffe Says He Wishes Public to Realize City's Sound Financing.

Paterson, N. J., March 6.—Operating on a cash budget basis during 1934, the City of Paterson, N. J., ended the year with a cash surplus of $414,0001. This and other important facts concerning the financial operation of the city in 1934 were revealed today in a display advertisement published by the City of Paterson in newspapers of leading financial centers of the country.

This is believed to be the first time that any municipality has published its statement of condition nationally in display advertising form, similar to that followed by banks, insurance companies and corporations, in out-of-town as well as local newspapers.

"In publishing our financial statement for the year 1934 in paid advertisement form, not only in Paterson newspapers, but also in certain other newspapers," Mayor John V. Hinchliffe stated, "we take official notice of our obligations to our taxpayers, who should be told precisely where their money went during the taxable year, and also to those who hold or deal in our bonds. We know that Paterson bonds are held in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, San Francisco and in other cities. Though government officials everywhere are urging greater publicity in corporate financial affairs, they do not seem to be setting an example in disclosing their own fiscal status. As far as we know, Paterson is the first city ever to follow the practice of banks, insurance companies and corporations in making its financial statement a matter of public record.

"Furthermore, we have about completed a program designed to establish our city on a firm financial foundation, and we want our latest figures available to all interested parties."

The city's cash surplus of $414,001 for the year, together with the budget items for debt retirement, enabled Paterson to achieve a reduction of $1,187,602 in its gross debt after making allowance for the issuance of $151,000 of improvement bonds and $267,000 of water bonds. Cash receipts during 1934 from miscellaneous revenues, current taxes, delinquent taxes and tax title liens, amounted to $8,412,100. Expenditures were $7,998,099.

Bond Market, Nervous, Dips To Lower Level

White House Statement Causes Confusion in Trading.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 6.—The bond market was thrown off balance by developments in Washington today and its poise was not recovered by some divisions before the session ended.

United States Government obligations were badly upset when the short-lived spark of inflation was set off by President Roosevelt's pronouncement on prices and debts. Although slight improvement followed White House denials that this should be interpreted as indicating that the dollar would be further devalued, closing prices were from 4-32ds to nearly ½ point lower. The Government turnover was the heaviest in some time, aggregating $15,590,000.

In the corporate division, the first impulse seemed to be to get rid of high-grade bonds, because of their definitely limited earnings, and to buy speculative issues that held promise of price enhancement at the current low levels. This trend, however, was mostly reversed within an hour. Closing prices recorded losses of 1 to 2 points in a large number of secondary loans, while minor advances outnumbered declines in prime investments.

Baltimore & Ohio refunding 4s declined 2¼ points to 69½. Great Northern 4s were 2 points lower at 70, and Southern Railway consolidated 6s yielded 1½ to 97. Others selling lower included obligations of Delaware & Hudson, Erie, New York Central, Southern Pacific and Santa Fe. American Telephone debenture 5s closed ⅛ high at 112⅜ after dipping to 112 during the nervous trading shortly before noon, and Peoples Gas 5s ended unchanged at 104½ after dropping to 104. Slightly higher levels were established by Liggett & Myers 5s, Chesapeake Corporation 5s and West Penn Power 5s.

Outlook for Steel More Encouraging

New York, March 6 (AP).—The declining trend in steel production has been arrested and the action of scrap prices is also more encouraging, said Iron Age today in its weekly summary of the iron and steel trade. The production rate for the Nation was estimated at 48½ per cent, unchanged from the previous week.

"The opening of books for second quarter business has failed to stimulate forward buying except in flat rolled steel," asserted the review.

"Strip mills are comfortably booked for the remainder of this month. Production of full-finished sheets this week is believed to be at the highest level since last spring.

Culbertson On Bridge

Culbertson, 1935.

The basic Principles of Contract bidding do not and can not change. I have said before and now repeat, what was true in 1929 or 1933 will be true in 1939 or 1943. A system of Contract Bridge bidding is derived from mathematical truths not affected by argument or personal idiosyncrasies.

In the last few years the playing standards of the world's Contract Bridge players have shown a notable improvement. Players have a better grasp of the game and an ability to visualize trick-winning possibilities of the lower cards. They look beyond the Aces and Kings. With relative consistency they learned to make an extra trick in the play of the hand. Slam contracts no longer reach the front page.

As a result the entire structure of bidding must swing into line with player progressiveness. The Culbertson System does not, like much advertised motor cars, have its yearly models; but at this time I thought it wise to bring out a 1935 model, designed for speed and safety and streamlined to resist the whims of chance.

Though the fundamental changes are by no means radical, my readers will find some new and far-reaching effects in the analyses and play of hands, which, as will be seen, are in geometrical ratio to the unimpressive first causes.

The careful player does not wait until he finds out a hand is doomed before trying to steal a trick. If there is danger in the wind, he will sense it before the play of the cards makes it apparent to his opponents. In such a case he generally tries to steal his trick before his opponents are alive to the situation.

South, Dealer.

The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	1NT(1)	2♡
Dbl(2)	Pass	3♣(3)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—A negative notrump bid is sometimes justified with only two Queens and a Jack. In this case, however, North's barren distribution makes a pass a better call.

2—A tentative double. South wants North to pass if he can contribute some help in the heart suit together with some reasonable amount of defensive value.

3—North has nothing to offer in defense against a heart contract.

The Play.

West opened his nine of hearts, East winning with the Ace. A heart was returned and South won with the King. For want of anything better to do, declarer led his last heart, West discarding a spade and East winning with the ten. East led a diamond, which declarer let ride to West's King. The Jack of diamonds was next led, dummy winning with the Queen.

At this point declarer took stock for a brief moment. Two heart losers and a diamond loser were certain and a trump loser was quite possible. Declarer decided to see what could be done about avoiding a spade loss. The Jack of spades was accordingly led from dummy and when East carelessly ducked, declarer put up with King. The Ace and King of clubs were cashed, followed by the Ace of diamonds, and a low club to the Queen gave entry to the thirteenth diamond, on which the losing spade was sluffed. Had declarer waited until the trump loss became evident to East, he could not have managed to run the spade by.

"I HAVE two ambitions—one to be able to sing to please myself, and the other to have folks introduce Bing as Bob Crosby's brother."

That's what Bing's kid brother is working for. He's the alert, amusing lad who sings with the Dorsey Brothers Orchestra, who has hitchhiked for jobs, been tennis champion of three States and calls Bing his buddy.

"He's my buddy all right," said Bob the other day, "when I was born he asked mother, 'Well, what is it?' and when she said I was a boy he said, 'Well, it'd better be!' So he taught me to play baseball and marbles, and we were grand pals, then when I was just a little shaver—he's 11 years older than I am—he went away and made good.

"But he's seen to it since that I made good on my own, and not as his brother. When I went to Frisco for a job, he said 'Hello, howsa folks!' and that was the first and last thing he said to me for years. I was on an air show when the Dorseys heard me—so here I am."

Here he is—one of a family of nine children—children, who, if they are anything like Bob, are bound to make good. Bob has a quick grin, a voice that doesn't suit him—"if I could only hit the F——" he complains.

He can talk amusingly about himself, about Bing, about Everett, the brother who is his manager. "And a better manager a guy never had!" he says loyally. He tells about the family nicknames for each other. Bing is "No speakum Joe," and his father's name is prefaced with "Happy Time." Everett with "New York Charlie," and so on—all indicative of what the family thinks (privately at least) about itself.

Bob thinks the Dorsey's are the top where bands are concerned. "They're the musicians band," he explains. "Musicians go crazy over them And they're pretty smart bosses too. I remember, once I wanted to make a record of 'Dinah.' Everybody had played and sung the song, so I asked Jimmie what I could do to make it different. He said, 'Just sing the melody—nobody's ever done that!'"

Tomorrow Bill McCormack, of The Post staff, will interview Capt. James T. Duke, Third Cavalry, on the subject of horsemanship. WJSV 10:45 p. m.

The Boswell Sisters, coming to the Earle on Friday, have a new sort of scrapbook. Whenever they send out a requested photograph, it is accompanied by a questionnaire, in the form of a perforated sheet, titled "Memory Book of the Boswell Sisters' Friends of the Air."

Typical queries include the color of your eyes, favorite stage actor, movie you like best, favorite political character, what you eat when you're especially hungry, your favorite orchestra, and on down to your favorite poem.

Three Men and Diana

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Diana Carmichael's grandmother kept a boarding house down at the end of Mason avenue, where the town trailed out into empty lots and railway fences. Diana slept with her grandmother in the back parlor, and papa's cot was shoved under the sink, in the big closet, which had once been a dressing room. Most of "Gram's" lodgers were old persons, thin, shriveled old women, who subsisted on pittances. The young working men seldom stayed long and there were the Coggleses, who paid two dollars for the front room. Diana suffered at being poor. She could not dress as the other girls dressed. She longed, too, to go to college. That ambition was so strong that Diana had no thought left for boys. Peter Platt, who has a room in Gram's house, advised Diana to work her way through college.

DIANA looked at Peter thoughtfully. He was a square, stocky, clumsy boy, with red hair on his hands and curling thickly over a bullet head. His nose turned up squarely; his jaw was wide and hard, and he liked to talk what Diana secretly considered a sort of half-baked socialism.

Peter got his breakfast at the house, he and Diana sharing the casual meal in the big, bare kitchen; Diana refilling the coffee pot, Peter clumsy with the toast. Working as hard as he did, he had no time for exercise or play; his skin was unhealthily pale, and he was too heavy.

She felt sorry for Peter, somehow, and presently agreed to go to the "flickers" with him on his free night. He rarely went; it excited him very obviously to have her promise to go, and he talked eagerly of it for two days.

Invited to Joan's.

Then she had to telephone him at the drugstore and break the engagement. Diana was excited herself, now. Joan had asked her, for the first time, to spend the night at the Rowley house! Joan, in her own fascinating and careless way, had explained that mother had a date, and Duncan was away; "it'll be just us!"

No formidable grown-ups; Diana would have chosen it to be just that way. She rushed home at lunchtime for her things; her blue silk Sunday dress was her best; her pajamas were thin and faded and had been much washed—no matter, she was going to stay at Joan's house! Gram would not let her take either at the moment. No, she would "rub out" the pajamas and take the spots out of the dress and press it. She had nothing else to do. And she would leave them with the suitcase at Rutherford that afternoon.

Diana went for the suitcase to Rutherford's office in the afternoon. There it was with its contents nicely packed with tissue paper; it was thrilling to have Joan catch it up gayly and throw it into the big Rowley car and say to the driver, "We have to stop at Meigs,' George."

Was Embarrassed.

Also they had sodas, as the Rutherford girls loved to do, at the counter, and Diana was embarrassed because she felt that she would like to introduce Joan to the red-faced Peter Platt and yet did not quite dare. Suppose nice girls didn't introduce soda fountain boys to their friends?

Peter did not wait on them, but he kept going to and fro behind the counter, mixing malted milks and dropping scoops of ice cream into tall glasses; Diana could have attracted his eye quickly enough if she had been sure it was correct. But even when he spoke to her, she did not introduce him to Joan.

"So we don't go to the flickers tonight?" he said, splitting a banana for a sundae.

Place Was Exciting.

"I'm going to be away tonight." Diana felt confused and ashamed; she did not enjoy her soda, and breathed easier when she and Joan were back in the car again.

"Who's the perspiry boy who got his thumb in the ice cream?"

"That's Peter Platt." Diana had to laugh at the description, but she felt a little ashamed of both herself and Peter.

She had been in the Rowley house before, but only downstairs. Her heart was beating hard with excitement and pleasure when they went through the big central hallway, and past the palms and mirrors and the deep seats with carved, dark, high backs, and mounted the curved stairs.

Flitting lightly upstairs, with all her usual simplicity and easiness, Joan preceded her guest to her own room—an enormous room. It was incredible that just one slim girl should have this luxury of space to herself; windows looking down on trees, twin beds exquisitely complete, with cretonne covers.

Too Proud to Explain.

Diana accepted it all shyly. Pride kept her from too obvious surprise, too obvious admiration. But her breath was short, and she felt excited; it was not easy to talk.

"Come on and see, Mother," Joan suggested.

This might be a little formidable, but again Diana followed in proud silence and they went into Mrs. Rowley's room.

"That you, Joan? Who's with you?"

"Diana Carmichael, Mother." Somehow it sounded very pretty in Joan's pretty voice.

"Oh, hello, Diana!" Mrs. Rowley was lying down; magazines had coasted from her couch to the floor; she stretched a soft, ringed hand to Diana. "Did you have something to eat, girls?"

"We had sodas at Meigs. We're going down now and see what we can find."

Room Was Gorgeous.

This room made even Joan's look bare; it was incredibly beautiful. The walls cream and the rich brocade curtains at the windows a metallic blue; the rug over Mrs. Rowley's knees was blue, too, with lines of bright crimson, and the great dim four-poster bed gave back the same note of crmison and cream and blue.

French windows opening upon an awninged upper balcony that showed a bright balustrade of tiled flower boxes. It was incredible that so much splendor could exist unsuspected in quiet Bayhead, hidden away in deep gardens and behind high hedges and brick walls. Something starved, eager, in Diana's very soul, fed upon it, drank it with insatiable delight.

They went into a large, white pantry, where Joan did casual, amazing things in opening jars of jam and peanut butter; slashing into cake; pouring milk.

"We've got a regular machine for making milkshakes here; my brother makes 'em all the time. But Hong gets mad at me!"

A Family Tragedy.

"Are you the youngest, Joan?"

"My sister Marjorie was younger," Joan said seriously. "She was backed into by the chauffeur when she was six. That was nine years ago, but my mother never will get over it."

"Wasn't that awful?" Di's eyes were wide.

"Awful! They said Mother simply went from one faint to another—well, Marjorie really was beautiful, and she was smart, too." Joan finished her milk, bit into a slice of chocolate cake. "She was going to Rand Phillips' birthday party" she went on. "She was all dressed up in a hand-made batiste dress Mother had brought her from Paris; I couldn't go because I had poison oak. Marge ran out to the back of the garage, with the man, you know. And he backed out, fast—I heard them all screaming and yelling—"

Both girls were silent for a while.

"You're an only child, aren't you, Di?"

"Yes, I never had a sister or brother."

"And your father and mother dead?"

Honest Confession.

It was easy to be honest, here in this beautiful place with Joan's friendship so pleasant and heartening.

"My mother is. But my father's living."

"Your father is?"

"Oh, yes."

"I didn't know that!"

"He comes and goes. Usually his business keeps him going about."

"I didn't know that!"

"He's here now," Di observed, in a hesitant voice. There seemed little to add to the statement. Joan was still amazed.

"I thought your father was dead!"

"No, he's living."

"What's his profession, Di?"

"Papa isn't a professional man." Di explained, with all a daughter's gallant generosity. "He's had—theatrical interests," she went on, a little painstakingly, "but just now he has—he has—agencies."

Joan Admired Her.

Joan looked up quickly, keenly, from her book; looked down again. Both their faces were a little red.

"I like you, Di!" Joan said, somewhat confusedly. "I love—I love your loyalty!"

"I'm glad," Diana could only answer, clearing her throat. "Your father's in the hardware business, isn't he, Joan?"

"Wholesale," Joan answered, a little surprised. "I thought you knew. And then, of course, he has 'Hear-itall.'"

"That's the radio?"

"He owns the patent," Joan answered, and Diana realized afresh what a wonderful family the family of Rowley was.

"There's a little trouble now," Joan presently went on, "about the five-and-ten stores. They're undermining everything and selling things for nothing! It makes dad terribly mad, and he and Mr. Palmer are always talking about it. Dad says if he has to go to Sacramento himself he'll have to stop it; he says lots of the little dealers look to Rowley & Palmer to protect them."

This impressed Diana afresh with Joan's intelligence and with the importance of the Rowley family. But then everything did that.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

MEMBERSHIP of sub-committees to hear three bills of vital importance to Federal employes is expected to be announced today.

The three bills, all indorsed by the American Federation of Government Employes, are:

The Ramspeck bill to restore 30 days' vacation leave, H. R. 5152; the Ramspeck bill to make sick leave cumulative, H. R. 5153, and the Celler bill to prohibit discrimination in the civil service because of marital status, H. R. 5051.

BAKER.

It is also expected that hearings on the leave bills will begin Monday or Tuesday. The hearings on the Sirovich bill also will resume next week, probably on Tuesday. At that time Malcolm Kerlin, personnel officer, Commerce, and Dr. L. J. O'Rourke, Civil Service Commission, likely will be heard.

Ramspeck Explains Bills.

Appointment of postmasters under the present system is "the greatest political liability a man in office can have," it was declared by Representative Robert Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, before a capacity audience of Federal employes, under the auspices of War Department Local No. 261, National Federation of Federal Employes.

Mr. Ramspeck said he still hopes that Congress "may rise to the heights and take the Postoffice Department out of politics." He advocates filling higher paid responsible positions through promotion of qualified postal employes, the largest group of Federal employes and a group engaged in a definite business.

While he finds "intense interest" in retirement, the Civil Service Committee chairman said he doesn't intend to support any legislation to retire employes involuntarily after 30 years' service without fixing a reasonable age limit. However, he did not indicate what amendments might be forthcoming.

Miss Gertrude Coyle, Finance Office, War, leader of NFFE Union, No. 261, presided at the meeting.

Among the Federal employes attending the United Young Men's Democratic Clubs of Montgomery County meeting at Indian Spring Country Club were Burke Fitzpatrick, PWA; Donelson C. Glassie, PWA; Edward Northup, HOLC; Leland Barrows (C), Soil Erosion Service, and Sydney Prince, NRA.

Veterans' Administration Benefit.

Plans are near completion for the Veterans' Administration Welfare Association St. Patrick's dance March 16 at the Wardman Park Hotel. H. A. Hutson (P), is in charge of arrangements, assisted by Miss Ada M. Cady, Mrs. Esther Burgan, Miss Bernadine O'Donnell, Miss Janey McRae and Harold Allen Long.

George Gaul's orchestra has been engaged and the floor show will include Evelyn Tyner, Kitty Simon, Talbott Haslett, Susan Hall and Laurelle Avery. Allen R. Sill, information desk, Veterans' Administration, and Louis De Moreland, room 134, are in charge of tickets.

J. Lawrence Dobell, editorial assistant, Soil Erosion Service, Represented Gov. Frank H. Cooney, of Montana, at the gubernatorial conferences held here Saturday and Monday.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF (F), (P) or (C) follows your name in this column, call in person on the Federal Diary editor today between 4:30 and 6 p. m. You will receive tickets to Loew's Fox (stage, Dave Appolon and his "International Varieties;" screen, Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter in "One More Spring"); or to Loew's Palace (Ronald Colman, Loretta Young and cast of 5,000 in "Clive of India"), or to Loew's Columbia (Warner Oland in "Charlie Chan in Paris").

E. F. Klinge Elected.

New officers and committees are announced by Patent Office Society, with E. F. Klinge, president; V. I. Richard, vice president; Miss E. L. Morse (F), secretary, and C. C. Pidgeon, treasurer. The following committee chairmen have been named:

A. E. Donnelly, executive; J. Hull, membership; N. T. Ball, official relations; M. K. Knotts (P), publicity; R. E. Adams, education; H. L. Yinger, affiliation; H. Stultz, social; F. D. Morris, auditing; A. E. Donnelly, elections; P. J. Federico, bowling; H. Goldsmith (F), tennis; C. O. Davis (C), golf, and J. Blair, basket ball.

The march meeting of the Government Printing Office Alumni will be held at 8 p. m. today at the Hayloft, 1326 Massachusetts avenue northwest. All members are urged to attend this session, which was originally scheduled for last night.

JAMES E. BENEDICT, formerly assistant curator of the Department of Biology, National Museum, will present an illustrated paper on "The Ferns of the District and Vicinity" at the meeting of the Biological Society at the Cosmos Club Saturday night.

At the same meeting Frank Craighead, jr., John Craighead and Robert Stevenson will show slides and motion pictures of "Catching and Training Hawks for Hunting." They also will exhibit their trained hawks. The program is open to the public.

"I watched some reading this metropolitan paper and they read the paper in their way but they did not settle down to reading their newspaper as if it were a real happening and a real present happening until they came to the story of the quintettes, that and the crossword puzzle was the only solid satisfaction in the metropolitan newspaper that made like a small town newspaper a real happening of today as today is as any one can say it in saying it as any one can know in knowing it."

Arizona Senate Asks U. S. Investigate Mexico

Phoenix, Ariz., March 6 (AP).—Charges that God is being "wiped out of the hearts of Mexican children" and "communism is becoming deeply inrooted" were voiced in the Arizona Senate today. The situation was held up as a threat to the United States.

The statements were made in support of a memorial calling on Congress to authorize Senator Borah's requested investigation into alleged religious persecution in Mexico. The memorial passed, 17 to 2.

Solution to "What Would You Do?"

"THE BIG SHOT"

Broadcast Wednesday, at 10:30 P. M., from WJSV

If Dan hesitated for one split second, his brother's nervous fingers would pull the trigger that would tear his honest Irish heart out. But could he shoot his own brother?

One shot rang out! A body fell to earth! "Oh, Terry, I had to shoot your gun out of your hand or you would have killed me," Dan cried remorsefully.

"Let me bandage his hand," Margaret Mary said. "It's only a little wound. Quick—we must get him home."

"Dan, take me home—the cops'll be here any minute," Terry pleaded. "I'll never do wrong again. Take me home, Dan—to Mom."

"I'll take you home, Terry, lad, gladly——"

"Thank you, Dan, thank you—quick, down these stairs—it's a clean getaway."

"I'll take you home until your hand is healed. But then"—Dan's eyes filled—"then I'll have to take you back to the reformatory. You'd better learn NOW than later—that CRIME CAN NEVER PAY you anything!"

Do not miss the next in this gripping series of real-life dramas—

Strength.

WE ALL admire the man so strong that competition he defies, he fights or wrestles hard and long, to gain a good, substantial prize. We marvel at his speed and brawn, while struggling on the padded floor; he shines a while and then he's gone, and he is heard of never more. We view his history at length, and find it but a useless thing; no man is better for his strength, exhibited in mat or ring. He might have used his massive might in something useful, something sane; but he just flourished for a night, and all his labor was in vain. We all admire that intellect which leads a man to write a book that we, in manner circumspect, may cherish in our inglenook. Perhaps the book will last a year, but it will perish soon or late, and then we'll find it disappear to where the junkmen congregate. Its influence is like the dew that shines at morning on the grass, and ere the morning hours are through that influence is bound to pass. Of all the countless printed tomes that represent the authors' arts, how many influence our homes, or give direction to our hearts? We all admire the moral man who has no use for graft or pelf, who follows up his simple plan, to love his neighbor as himself. His kindness shows in every deed, his conduct is of purest ray; and when he dies we all proceed to honor him as best we may. His is the strength that will endure, his the ambition that excels, his the example high and pure, his is the soul that's wearing bells.

Awards Given Western High Essay Winners

Dr. Healy Stresses Ideals at Assembly for Finalists in Post Contest.

To "keep their heads in the sky and their feet firmly on earth in these days of social, economic and political unrest" was urged upon the youth of today and especially local high school students by Dr. Thomas H. Healy, assistant dean of the School of Foreign Service of Georgetown University, at exercises in Western High School Tuesday night in honor of that school's champions in the Second Washington Post Scholarship Competition.

Silver medals, gifts of The Post, were presented by Dr. Healy to the three champions, Nellie S. Strong, Ashby Jump and Margaret R. Whitney. The winners, all seniors, defeated 200 classmates with their original essays on social science topics. They thereby won the right to compete in the project's finals during the next two months for four-year tuition scholarships offered by the co-sponsors with The Post in the contest, which include American, Catholic, Georgetown and Howard universities.

William Waldo, one of Western's division champions last year and now, by virtue of his success in last spring's finals, a student at the Georgetown Foreign Service School, addressed the assembly, as did also Louise Engle, director of the competition. H. K. Bosley, civics teacher at Western, presided.

Stresses Realities, Ideals.

"It is highly important," declared Dr. Healy, "that the study of the social sciences be encouraged and aided. But these studies will be a snare and a delusion unless they are based on a combination of worthy ideals and practical realities. The Washington Post has done a commendable work in encouraging, through this project, the sober and scientific study of the great social problems confronting us today. The School of Foreign Service of Georgetown University, which was established primarily to promote sound study of the social sciences, takes a particular interest in this enterprise and is delighted that in its own way it can help contribute to its success."

"This competition," declared Waldo, "brought me not only the finest prize I could ask, tuition in the foreign service course at Georgetown, but it forced upon me much extra-curriculum experience in research at Washington's great libraries. This has been especially helpful to me in my college work."

Waldo won second place in the Georgetown campus finals of the contest last spring and so impressed his faculty judges that they created a special second award for him in a half-tuition scholarship at the foreign service school.

Mrs. Engle described the project as "an effort of The Post, in collaboration with local universities, to encourage careful fact finding in current and historic civic problems, as well as to provide college training for outstanding students."

Miss Strong, the youngest of the winners, is 15 and the daughter of John Logan Strong, of the Tariff Commission. She stands high in all her classes and is a member of Phi Beta Rho, Western's scholarship society. She is also active in the Glee and Dramatic clubs, and the En Avant, Esperanto, Moderns and Chemistry clubs. She has traveled through France in recent years as well as this country. Her essay was entitled: "The Role of Business Interests in Our Government's Formation."

Mr. Jump, 16-year-old son of W. A. Jump, of 3247 Patterson street northwest, is second lieutenant in the cadet corps, a reporter on the staff of The Western Breeze, and belongs to the Constitution, Debating and Officers' and Chevrons clubs. His essay was on "Russia Today."

Writes on Hamilton.

Miss Whitney, 17, daughter of George G. Whitney of 3013 Forty-fourth place northwest, covered in her winning essay the topic, "Alexander Hamilton, the Greatest Political Figure in American History."

She is fond of athletics, being prominent in the basket ball, rifle and track teams. She also belong to the Glee Club.

Miss Strong and Miss Whitney will compete in finals at the American University on April 27 for the two full tuition scholarships offered the two highest girls among the division champions. Mr. Jump will compete for the scholarship of his preference from those offered by American, Catholic and Georgetown universities.

Missouri House Acts For 2 Pct. Sales Tax

Jefferson City, Mo., March 6 (AP). The Missouri House of Representatives amended its sales tax bill today to provide a levy of 2 per cent. The bill originally called for a tax of one-half of 1 per cent.

The amendment carried by only one vote, 69 to 68, seven votes short of the number needed for final passage. Proponents of the higher rate said they could muster the votes necessary for passage late this week. The Senate has not acted upon the measure.

Bell Expected To Hazard Fate In Second Trial

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 6.—When Edward C. Bell, prominent Fredericksburg business man, is brought before Judge Frederick W. Coleman in corporation court tomorrow morning for setting of the date of his second trial on charges of wife-poisoning it is expected Bell will entrust his case to a trial jury.

It is believed trial will be set for the latter part of March, probably the last week, if the accused man pleads not guilty. Judge Coleman is said to have a full docket for April.

W. W. Butzner, chief of Bell's counsel, said tonight he could not divulge defense plans for tomorrow. It is not known whether a quick trial or postponement will be sought. Albert V. Bryan, prosecuting attorney, favors an early trial.

Bell was committeed to the State Hospital at Marion by Judge Coleman in December, when the jury which tried him on 12 counts of poisoning and attempting to poison his wife failed to reach a verdict. Bell's attorneys based their defense on a plea of insanity.

Bell is residing at the home of his brother, W. A. Bell, here, having been declared "sane" by four State paycharists last week. Under $10,000 bond, he is not permitted to visit his residence, where his wife is said to be improving after a long illness.
